Punjab Courts Act (XVIII of 1884), s. 70 (a)—Onus wrongly laid—Revision.

A revision is not justified on the mere ground that the onus was placed on the wrong party.

Ram v. Jowahir, 64 P. R. 1885; Hari Singh v. Dit Mal, 22 P. R. 1886; Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar, 20 A. 78; Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 C. 6; 11 I. A. 237, referred to.

Petition, under section 70 clause (1) (a) of Act XVIII of 1884 as amended by Act XXV of 1899, for revision of the orders of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 31st May 1910, and 11th November 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Class, Gurdaspur, dated 12th April 1910, decreeing plaintiff's suit.

Mr. Badar Din Kureshi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Fazal Ilahi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision under section 70 (1) (a) of the Courts Act and notice has been issued on the ground that the onus has apparently been wrongly laid in effect.

The suit is "unclassed" of the value of Rs. 99 and is for cancellation of a sale by a widow and for possession of the property sold. The issues were, whether the plaintiff was reversioner of Rahim Bakhsh, husband of the widow, whether the parties were bound by Customary Law or Muhammadan Law, whether the plaintiff was barred from suing, whether the purchase-money was used by the widow for a purpose specified in her husband's Will, and whether the alienation was for legal necessity and for consideration. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not proved that the widow could not, under the Customary Law governing the parties, alienate the house in suit and the alleged error in imposing the burden of proof is with reference to this point.

The lower Appellate Court considered various rulings and arrived at the conclusion on those rulings that the burden of establishing a custom limiting the widow's power of alienating the property in suit, was on the plaintiff and had not been discharged. The lower Appellate Court did not ignore the point and does not appear to have ignored any authority or instance cited.

In Ram v. Jowahir (1), Barkley and Spitta, JJ., held that interference in revision was not justified by an erroneous decision whether the plaintiff had a cause of action for the relief prayed for, provided that the Court below had jurisdiction to decide, and did decide, whether a cause of action existed.

In Hari Singh v. Dit Mal (2), Plowden, S. J. and Barney, J., held that interference in revision was not justified where a Court, having jurisdiction over a suit or other proceeding, had to consider the plea of limitation and did consider it and decided it erroneously.

In Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar (3), Edge, C. J., and Banerji, J., decided that the fact that a Court, having power to decide whether or not a certain matter was barred by limitation, wrongly decided that it was not barred and proceeded to deal with it afforded no ground for revision.

In each of the above cases, the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (4) was cited.

There is a very wide distinction between the powers of this Court under section 70 (1) (a) and 70 (1) (b) of the Courts Act prior to its amendment by Punjab Act I of 1912, and this distinction is apparently frequently lost sight of.

The counsel of perfection doubtless would be for every question of law to go to the highest Court in the Province, but considerations of the expense of the maintenance of a Court of sufficient strength to deal with every case, and of avoiding waste of time over petty cases by giving finality on questions of law to subordinate Courts in such cases, have resulted in the exclusion of certain cases from the provisions of section 70 (1) (b) and it is, in my opinion, absolutely illegal to apply section 70 (1) (b) to such cases in the guise of section 70 (1) (a). The question of onus consequently cannot, in my opinion, be touched in this case and the other points taken have no force.

The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bom. Act III of 1874), s. 67(d)—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Vatandar—Suit for declaration that plaintiff was head of Vatan family and entitled to certain share.*

A suit to obtain a declaration that the plaintiff is the head of a family of Vatandars and in consequence is entitled to a certain share in the Vatan belonging to the family, falls under the bar of section 67 (d) of the Hereditary Offices Act and, consequently, is not cognizable by a Civil Court.

Govind Sitaram v. Bapuji Mahadeo, 18 B. 516 and Balkrishna Chimnaji v. Balaji Ramchandra, 9 B. 25, explained.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 647 of 1909, confirming that passed by the Subordinate Juge at Malvan in Civil Suit No. 241 of 1903.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. S. Patkar and V. R. Shirur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHANDAVARKAR, J.—The first question is, what is the relief which the plaintiff has asked for by his plaint in this suit and,

In the register of lands and allowances in consideration whereof liability to serve still exists, the Collector shall specify:—

(a) the area of the lands, the names of the occupants, the survey number and assessments, the quit rent, if any, leviable, and the net revenue alienated by Government, the amount and nature of the cash or other allowances, the source from which they are payable, and the land and allowances assigned, for the remuneration of officiators:

(b) the names of the heads of families and of the representative Vatandars:

(c) whether the service is performed by one representative Vatandar or otherwise: if by several in successive periods, the order in which they are to succeed each other:

(d) the proportional share of the Vatan possessed by each head of family which may be expressed in annas or fractions of a rupee:

(e) the number of officiators required to perform the duties:

(f) the nature of the settlement of inferior village Vatans referred to in Part X: * * *

(g) such other particulars as Government may (from time to time) order to be recorded.

secondly, whether that relief is barred by the provisions of the Vatan Act.

It is urged before us by Mr. Desai that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit because what is asked by the plaintiff is not any relief which would be prohibited by section 67 of the Vatan Act, but a mere declaration that he is a member of Sambhu's branch, and that as such he has a two-thirds share in the Vatan belonging to that branch. We have had the plaint in the original read out to us and we have carefully considered its terms and its prayer. The summary of it as given by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment is substantially correct. In his plaint, the plaintiff complains that he belongs to Sambhu's branch of the Vatan family; that Sambhu was the head of that branch so long as he was alive; that he dealt with the Revenue Authorities, executed kabulayats, and owned a particular share; but that since Sambhu's death, the defendant has been successfully posing as the head of the Vatan entitled to deal with the Collector and to pass kabulayats, and, therefore, entitled to be put upon the record under section 67 as the head of the branch. It is for the purpose of getting the defendant out of the way and having his own name recorded as the head of the branch in the Collector's Register that the suit has been brought. That is substantially the nature of the suit, and so it has been treated by both the Courts below. But Mr. Desai relies in support of his argument on the decision of this Court in Govind Sitaram v. Bapuji Mahadeo (1), where Sargent, C. J., held that the duty of the Collector, as determined by section 67 of the Vatan Act, was confined to specifying the names of the heads of families and the proportionate part held by each head, but that he was in no way concerned with the rights of the members of a particular branch inter se. The meaning of that decision is that it is for the Collector, in the first instance, to determine who is the head of a particular branch of a Vatan family. Having determined that, it is also the sole function of the Collector under the Act to determine the proportionate part possessed by that head. But given the head and the proportionate part he possesses, as determined by the Collector in the exercise of his exclusive jurisdiction, the question what the rights of the members of that branch inter se are, with regard to their shares in the proportionate part so determined, is a question which (according to the decision cited) lies within the province of a Civil Court. The judgment in Govind Sitaram v. Bapuji Mahadeo (1) would at first sight seem to be in conflict with a prior decision of this Court to which Sargent, C. J., was also a party, viz., Balkrishna Chimnaji v. Balaji Ramchandra (2). But a close examination of both the cases satisfies us that there is no conflict. What the plaintiff in the latter case sought was a declaration of his share in the Vatan and of his title to have his name entered in the Vatan Register. That was under section 97. If he had asked merely for a declaration of his share in the Vatan without any reference to his title as the head of the family and the proportionate part which he possessed as such head, it would have been held that the suit lay. Sargent, C. J. pointed out in his judgment that it was true that the Court could not make a declaration of his right to a one-fourth share of the Vatan, without first determining whether he is the adopted son of Chimnaji; but that "the declaration prayed for would be beyond the Court's jurisdiction." That declaration related to the question of headship and the share in respect of it. In the suit before us now, that is in substance the declaration prayed for.

For these reasons, the decree must be confirmed with costs. There must be separate sets of costs.

BATCHELOR, J.—I agree that this is a suit to obtain a declaration from the Civil Court to the effect that the late head of the family, Sambhu, being now dead, the present head of the family is one of the plaintiffs and not one of the defendants and that the plaintiffs are in consequence entitled to a proportional share of the Vatan. A suit of this character seems to me to fall directly under the ban of clause (d) of section 67 of the Hereditary Offices Act. The decision in Govind Sitaram v. Bapuji Mahadeo (1) can be of no assistance to the present plaintiffs who are not suing as Vatandars for the adjustment of any dispute between themselves as to their distributive shares in a total portion awarded by the Collector to the head of the family.

(1) 18 B. 516.

(2) 9 B. 23.

I agree, therefore, that this suit is not competent.

Maharaja PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (I of 1879 B. C.), s. 123—Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (V of 1908 B. C.), s. 208, sub-s. (1)—Bengal Rent Recovery Act (VIII B. C. of 1865), ss. 5, 16—Decree for rent of tenure—Exemption of portion of tenure by Commissioner in favour of maintenance grantees—Sale of unexempted portion of tenure in execution of decree for rent of tenure—Whether purchaser gets free of encumbrance or not—Sale proclamation, what to be stated in—Apportionment of rent of exempted and unexempted portion.

A decree for rent was obtained in respect of a tenure comprising several villages. The judgment-debtor tenure-holder had created, upon some of the villages, encumbrances by way of maintenance grants in favour of his dependents. When the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree by sale of the tenure, the maintenance grantees applied for exemption of the villages comprised in their grants under section 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879, and an order of exemption was made by the Commissioner:

Held, (1) that, notwithstanding the order for partial exemption of the tenure from sale, the decree was to be executed as a decree for rent in respect of the unexempted portion, and the effect of a sale of the unexempted portion was to pass the property to the purchaser free of all encumbrances:

(2) that the decree-holder was not bound to apportion the rent that might be leviable from the exempted and unexempted villages respectively, and that he would comply with the provisions of section 5 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865 if he stated in the sale proclamation the yearly rent payable in respect of the entire tenure together with a note that the villages named were exempted from sale under the order of the Commissioner.

Appeal from the order of the Deputy Collector of Ranchi, dated May 8th, 1912.

Babu Bipin Chandra Mallik, for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Dey, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of first impression as to the construction of section 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879. It appears that the respondent obtained a decree for rent against the appellant in respect of a tenure on the 19th April 1905. On the 28th November 1910, the application for execution now under consideration, was presented. The judgment-debtor, tenure-holder, had created, on a part of his tenure, encumbrances by way of maintenance grants in favour of his dependents. The properties of these maintenance holders were at the time under the charge of the Encumbered Estate Act Authorities. They applied for exemption of the villages comprised in the maintenance grants under section 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879. Upon the recommendation of the Deputy Commissioner, the order of exemption was made by the Commissioner on the 30th March 1911. The question in controversy now is, what is the precise effect of this order of exemption.

Before we determine this question, it is necessary to consider, in the first instance, by what statutory provisions the matter before us is governed. The Commissioner made his order for exemption ostensibly under section 203 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. In our opinion, the order in question could not have been made under that section, but this does not affect the validity of the order inasmuch as it could have been made under section 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879. Sub section (1) of section 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, shows that the provisions contained therein apply to cases of execution of decrees passed by the Deputy Commissioner under that Act. The decree now under execution was passed prior to the commencement of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. Consequently, under section 8, clause (e) of the Bengal General Clauses Act, 1899, the provision applicable is that contained in section 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879, and the effect of that section we now proceed to consider.

Section 123 provides that if the decree, of which execution is sought, for arrears of rent in respect of a tenure, the decree-holder may make an application for the sale of such tenure, and the tenure may thereupon be brought to sale in execution of the decree, according to the provisions for the sale of under-tenures contained in the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865, and all the provisions of that Act shall, as far as may be, apply. This is followed by a proviso to the effect that the Commissioner may by order in any case in which he may consider it desireable so to do, prohibit the sale of any tenure or portion thereof.

On behalf of the judgment-debtor, it has been contended that the effect of an order of exemption of a portion of a tenure by the Commissioner is to make it impossible for the decree-holder to execute the decree as a decree for rent under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. It is plain that the effect of an order of exemption of a part of the tenure is not to deprive the decree-holder entirely of his right to execute the decree; for if that had been the consequence, the effect would have been the same as if the entire tenure had been exempted from sale. We take it, therefore, that notwithstanding the order for partial exemption, it is open to the decree-holder to execute his decree. The real question in controversy is, whether, on an order for partial exemption, the decree is to be executed as a decree for money or as a decree for rent. On behalf of the appellant, it has been argued that the order for exemption can be made in respect of a part of the tenure only where the decree-holder seeks to execute a decree for rent of a fraction of a tenure, and in support of this view, reference has been made to the case of Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty v. Dhun Monee Chowdrain (1). That case, in our opinion, has no application; it merely shows that when a share of a tenure has been treated as an independent and self-contained tenancy, in an execution of a decree for rent due in respect thereof, the property may be sold as if it were an entire tenure. But it is plain that the provisions of section 123 cannot be restricted in the manner suggested, because if that was the only case where an order for partial exemption could be made, that would really be a case for application for sale of what constituted an entire tenure, and the prohibition would in substance be of the sale of such a tenure. Section 123 plainly covers a case of the description now before us, when an application is made for the sale of all the villages comprised in a tenure, but the Commissioner, for reasons sufficient in his opinion, directs the exemption of some of the villages from the sale. In such a case, it is plain that the sale of the unexempted portion is still to take place under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865; in other words, the restrictions in the proviso do not affect the provisions in the substantive part of the section for the sale of the property. Reliance, however, has been placed upon sections 4 and 16 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865, to show that the Legislature contemplated that sales under that Act should be sales of entire tenures. It may also be conceded, as laid down by the Full Bench in Shim Chand Mitter v. Juggut Chunder Sircar (2), that, ordinarily, when a sale takes place of an entire tenure under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865, the purchaser acquires the property free of all encumbrances. But there is, in our opinion, no inconsistency between the proviso to section 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879, and the provisions of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. It was competent to the Legislature to lay down that a sale under section 123 would be a sale under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865, notwithstanding the fact that what was sold was not the entire tenure but only the unexempted portion thereof. This, we think, is the result of the legislative provisions on the subject. If the contrary view were maintained, the result would be that by an order of exemption, the landlord decree-holder would be practically deprived of his security for the rent. If the sale of the unexempted portion was merely the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, the property might not be saleable at all, and a purchaser might not be found willing to bid a sufficient sum for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt. The Legislature could not have intended that because, as in the case before us, an order of exemption is made for the benefit of persons whose title has been created by the defendant under circumstances which could not be controlled by the landlord, the landlord practically loses his security for the arrears of rent due to him. We hold accordingly that the effect of a sale, of the unexempted portion, is to pass the property to the purchaser free of all encumbrances. When the purchaser has obtained the property, what his precise position will be, that is, whether he will be, jointly with the holder of the exempted portion of the property, liable for the whole rent is a matter which does not require consideration at this stage. It is conceivable that the purchaser may with good reason contend that as the landlord, though under compulsion, has brought to sale some only of the villages included in the tenure, he is bound to apportion the rent; the consequence of such a sale, if the view suggested is well founded, may be that the tenure is ultimately split up into two distinct tenures. These, however are matters which must be left open for consideration, if and when the contingency arises. It is sufficient for us to hold now that the entire decree may be executed as a decree for rent against the unexempted portion of the tenure, and that the auction-purchaser will acquire the status of a purchaser under section 16 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. The view put forward by the judgment-debtor appellant, therefore, cannot be accepted.

(1) 15 W. R. 524.

(2) 22 W. R. 541.

A minor question has been raised in the appeal and requires only a brief consideration. It has been suggested that the sale proclamation was not properly drawn up and that it was not competent to the decree-holder to set out in the sale proclamation the amount of rent that might be legitimately levied from the villages sought to be sold and the villages exempted respectively. Reference has been made in this connection to section 5 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. That section provides that "the notice of sale shall specify, in the words used in the plaint in the suit in which the decree was made, the name of the village, estate and purgunnah or other local division, in which the land comprised in the said under-tenure is situated, the yearly rent payable under the said under-tenure and the gross amount recoverable under the said decree." It is clear that in the case before us, the decree-holder was not bound to apportion the rent that might be leviable from the exempted and unexempted villages respectively. He would have strictly complied with the provisions of section 5, if, in the words of the section, he had stated yearly rent payable in respect of the entire tenure together with a note that the villages named were exempted from sale under the order of the Commissioner. The judgment-debtor, therefore, cannot reasonably complain of what has been done by the decree-holder. At any rate, as a new sale proclamation is to be issued, we direct that it be drawn up in strict conformity with section 5 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. The rent will not be apportioned, the rent payable annually in respect of the whole tenure will be stated together with a note that certain specified villages were exempted from sale.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at ten gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

A tenant, who has got into possession under a lease from the landlord, is bound to restore the landlord's possession before he can set up an independent title.

Where defendants got into possession under a kanom deed from plaintiff, and after the execution of the kanom, the plaintiff accepted quit-rent pattahs from Government in respect of some of the lands demised:

Held, that the arrangement between the plaintiff and Government did not bar plaintiff's right to possession from the defendants.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar in A. S. No. 764 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Ponani, in C. S. No. 539 of 1908.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are clear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court :—

"Plaintiff sued to recover certain properties which had been demised on Kanom under

GHULAM ALI v. SHIV NATH.

Exhibit A to defendants Nos. 1—3 on 5th December 1904.

Plaint item No. 1 comprises plots A and A1, in the plan Exhibit M. Plaint item No. 2 comprises plots C and C1. The properties, which are Survey Nos. 102-1, 103-8, and 103-47 of Eramangalam amshom, had been originally demised to one Moosamu, 14th defendant, who assigned his rights to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 under Exhibits C and D in 1891 and 1894. Subsequently the Kychit, Exhibit A, was executed by defendants Nos. 1—3 to plaintiff.

2. Defendants Nos. 1—6, while admitting the execution of Exhibit A, contended that the plaint properties were not identical with those included in Exhibit A, and that they were not put in possession of the plaint properties. The Munsif found in plaintiff's favour on the first point, and that defendants were in possession on the date of Exhibit A.

3. It appears that subsequent to the settlement of the Ponnani Taluq, plaintiff claimed the jenm right to certain lands as against Government, and gave the Collector notice of his intention to file a Civil Suit; see Exhibit F. Subsequently, however, plaintiff abandoned his claim and accepted quit-rent patta Exhibit E in respect of the plaint properties from Government. Quit-rent pattas Exhibits II, III and IV for the same lands had, it appears, been previously granted to 2nd defendant, and two persons named Gopala Menon and Narayana Menon, who are in possession of the lands.

4. The question for decision is whether by the acceptance of the patta, Exhibit E, plaintiff has lost his jenm right to the lands. The pattadars, 2nd defendant, Gopala Menon and Narayana Menon, are in possession of the lands. It is not proved that the pattas were cancelled prior to the issue of a fresh patta to plaintiff. The pattadars are entitled to hold the lands so long as they pay the revenue properly leviable from them and they can only be ousted under legal process taken under Act II of 1864, see Pullanappally Sankaran Nambudri v. Vittil Thalakat Muhamod (1). It is clear, I think, that plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession of the properties.

In the plaint, plaintiff, while claiming the lands as the jenm of his Mana, alleged that he had also a quit-rent right. Then it is said that defendants are estopped under section 116 of the Evidence Act from denying plaintiff's title.

I agree with the Munsif that no question of estoppel arises in this case. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were in possession when they attorned to plaintiff and executed Exhibit A. After defendants had filed their written statements, plaintiff stated that he had only a quit-rent right and the plaint was amended accordingly. In order to enable plaintiff to succeed, he must, as the Munsif observes, show that he has a title superior to that of defendants.

The patta, Exhibit E, was obtained by plaintiff subsequent to the grant of pattas to defendants. Plaintiff's suit is not maintainable. I agree with the lower Court's findings on issues 1, 2, 8 and 9.

I dismiss the appeal with costs."

Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We think that, as the defendants got into possession as Kanomdars under the plaintiff, they are bound to restore his possession before they can set up an independent title [Cole on Ejectment, page 216, Muthuvaien v. Sinna Samavaiyan (2)]. We must, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and give the plaintiff a decree as prayed for. Improvements, according to the District Munsif's finding, shall be paid for. Plaintiff will have costs throughout from respondents Nos. 1 to 6 and Nos. 13 to 15. Time for redemption will be six months from this date.

Trust property may be followed into the hands of any one in whose hands it can be identified. The only person, who can escape liability for trust property in his possession, is a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the trust, or a transferee from him.

By two deeds, one L. vested his property in trust in order that his debts might be liquidated and appointed P. and H as trustees. One of the two deeds was attested by S. the son of L. P. and H., as trustees, executed certain promissory-notes in favour of certain creditors of L. After L.'s death, his son S. repudiated the trust. Soon after, the District Judge released the original trustees, P. and H., and appointed in their place G. and R. as trustees. Thereafter, S. sued G. and R. for possession of the trust property but this suit was dismissed on compromise on the understanding that all the property had been restored to the plaintiff S. As a matter of fact, however, some property remained with the trustees G. and R., while some was restored to S. The creditors sued S, G. and R. on the footing of pro-notes which had been executed by P. and H., the original trustees. The first Court dismissed the suits as against S. on the ground that he was no party to the pro-notes:

Held, that S. was equally liable with G. and R.

Where the question involved in several appeals is the same but only some of those appeals lie of right to the Chief Court, it is competent to the Chief Court to direct that all the appeals should be heard in the Chief Court, without going through the formality of presenting those appeals, which lie in the lower Court of Appeal, to that Court and then transferring them to its own file.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st October 1910, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in the seven appeals No. 12 to 18 of 1911 is precisely the same, and they will be disposed of by one judgment.

The appeal lay of right to this Court in cases Nos. 12 and 13, in each of which the amount involved is over Rs. 5,000. In the remaining five cases, the amounts were under Rs. 5,000 and the appeals would ordinarily have been to the Divisional Court, but as it was desirable that all should be dealt with together, the Judge by whom these appeals were admitted, acting under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, directed that these five appeals also should be heard in the Chief Court without going through the formality of presentation to the Divisional Court in order that orders of transfer might be immediately passed.

A preliminary objection has been made by Counsel for the respondent, Diwan Shib Nath, that this procedure is irregular. We have overruled this objection, as we consider that it would be a manifest abuse of Court process to put the appellants to the unnecessary trouble of going first to the Divisional Court, where there is no intention of permitting that Court to take any action beyond registering the appeals as duly presented. Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, gives us ample powers to meet the technical difficulty set up. It could, if necessary, be disposed of by making over the appeals even now to the Divisional Court with instructions to transfer them at once to the Chief Court immediately after registration, and under section 5 and section 14, Limitation Act, no question of limitation would be listened to, but we decline to make any such ridiculous order and hold that the appeals are properly before us for decision.

The essential facts of these appeals are very simple. By two deeds, dated 21st March and 20th April 1903, the latter attested by Diwan Shib Nath, his father, the late Diwan Lachman Das, made over his property in trust to Mr. Parker and Mr. Herbert in order that his debts might be liquidated. On the 25th May 1903, the trustees executed the promissory notes, on which these suits are based, in favour of certain creditors for comparatively small sums making them payable on the 26th January 1904, pages 30, 32 of the paper-book.

On the 1st January 1904, Diwan Lachman Das died and his son, three days later, gave notice repudiating the trust, to which he had previously consented (page 32). On the 21st April 1904 (pages 50—52), the District Judge released the original trustees and appointed in their place two other persons now represented by defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

On the 1st August 1907, Diwan Shib Nath instituted a suit against the second trustees for possession of the trust property. This suit was dismissed on the 20th May 1909 on compromise (pages 53 and 54) on an understanding that all the property had been restored to the plaintiff, but it has transpired that the restoration has been in fact incomplete. This is the finding of the lower Court, based on Diwan Shib Nath's pleas (pages 56, 59 and 61) and as there was no dispute on the point, the issues of the present suits (page 64) do not go into the question how much of the property is still in the hands of the second trustees and how much in those of Diwan Shib Nath.

The present suits by the creditors, based on the promissory-notes of 1903, were instituted in January 1910 as against (1) Diwan Shib Nath and (2) the second trustees. The lower Court has given decrees against the latter only, and these appeals are by the plaintiffs to enforce the joint liability of Diwan Shib Nath. None of the facts as given above are disputed.

The lower Court has dismissed the suits as against Diwan Shib Nath on the technical ground that he was no party to the promissory-notes sued on. This is a singularly unconvincing ground as defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were also no parties to the pro-notes, and yet they have not contested liability. Where the lower Court has gone wrong, however, is in overlooking the well known legal principle that trust property can be followed into the hands of any one in whose hand it can be identified. This is laid down in section 63, Indian Trusts Act, II of 1882, read with the illustrations thereto, and in the body of English case law of the Court of Chancery in its Equitable Jurisdiction upon which the Indian Act is framed. The question is discussed in Lecture X of Agnew's Law of Trust in British India, 1832, being the Tagore Law Lectures of 1881. The principle may be summarised by saying that the only person who can escape liability for trust property in his possession is a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the trust or a transferee from him. There is no attempt to make an allegation that Diwan Shib Nath can be brought into this category. His Counsel felt unable to argue either (1) that the trust was void, or (2) that Diwan Shib Nath had no notice, and (3) that he had no trust property in his possession. Under these circumstances, his joint liability is clear.

There is also no answer to a further plea of the plaintiffs-appellants that the interest allowed by the District Judge at 6 per cent. should have been made payable to the date of realisatioon instead of the dato of decree.

The appeals are accordingly accepted. The decrees of the lower Court are varied by making Diwan Shib Nath, defendant No. 1, liable equally with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the amounts decreed, and further by making the interest allowed at 6 per cent. payable from the date of institution of the suits till realisation of the amounts by the plaintiffs. The amounts will be realisable from such property only as is found in execution proceedings to be in the possession of the various defendants as property included in the trust. The decrees will carry costs throughout against all the defendants.

Appeals accepted.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for enhancement of the defendant's rent. The plaintiff is the present owner of a separated 10-anna share of a certain estate. This 10-anna share was in the year 1885 carved out of a separated 12-annas share of the same estate, the latter share and the 4-annas share having been formed into separate estates in the year 1344 as the result of a partition by metes and bounds. Subject to the estate, there was a tenure and it may be conceded that when the separated 12-annas share of the estate was divided into two parts, the separated 12-annas share of the tenure subordinate to it was also divided into two tenures, so that five-sixths of the whole 12-annas came to be held as a separate tenure under the 10-annas proprietor and the remaining one-sixth as a separate tenure under the 2 annas proprietor. In 1335, the 10-annas proprietor brought a suit against the holders of the five-sixths share of the tenure for rent. He obtained a decree and had their share sold and purchased it himself. The defendant is a ryot holding as such certain land which she formerly held under the owners of the two separated shares of the tenure. The plaintiff seeks to enhance her rent without joining in the suit the owner of the one-sixth share of the tenure. Both the lower Courts have held that such a suit is not permissible under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court says: "There is, however, no authority to hold that even if those shares of the taluq be considered two separate taluqs, the plaintiff as owner of the five-sixths share by virtue of her auction purchase is entitled to enhance the rental of five-sixths share of each of the ryoti holdings under the entire taluq. This proposition of the plaintiff does not at all seem to me equitable. Where the lands of the taluq have not been divided representing the aforesaid shares of it, one and all the ryoti holdings within it shall be taken as held under the entire body of landlords owning the whole taluq. As the entire body of landlords have not joined in bringing this suit, the plaintiff, being only the owner of it to the extent of five-sixths share, cannot maintain this suit for enhancement." We think that the view of the law on which the lower Appellate Court has acted is supported by the cases to which that Court has referred, namely, the case of Hurry Churn Bose v. Rajah Ranjit Singh (1) and the case of Baidya Nath De Sarkar v. Sheikh Jhin (2), as we conceive, the law applied in those cases is now well-settled and ought to be well known. The question depends in the first place on the meaning of the word "holding" as used in section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which again depends on the definition of the word in clause (9) of section 3. What has been held is that the word "holding" as used in the Tenancy Act, with reference to a raiyat, means an entire parcel or parcels of land and that a landlord who is only entitled to a fractional share of the landlord's interest in the land is not entitled under section 30 of the Act to sue alone for enhancement of rent. Reference was made to section 188 of the Act and it was argued that the owners of the two separated shares of the tenure are not joint landlords within the meaning of that section. Obviously, the division of the 12-annas share of the tenure for the purpose of the division of the same share of the proprietary interest, unaccompanied by a partition of the land by metes and bounds, does not necessarily involve a division of the raiyati holdings under the tenure and if the raiyats have agreed to pay or have paid their rent separately to the owners of the separated shares of the tenure in proportion to those shares it does not follow that they have agreed to the division of their holdings for any other purpose. For the present purpose, as we conceive, the owners of the separated shares of the tenure are still joint landlords. But we need not insist on that, because, as we have shown, the question depends not only on section 188, but also on the terms of section 30 and the plaintiff is not the landlord of a holding within the meaning of that section. The suit, having been brought under the Tenancy Act, is clearly subject to its provisions whether the defendants' holding came into existence before the passing of the Tenancy Act or not. It is really unnecessary to advert to what has been said in the Courts below.

The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bundelkhand Encumberd Estates Act (I of 1903), —Benefi tunder the Act claimed only by some mortgagors —Integrity of mortgage broken.

The failure of the mortgagee to make any claim against some of the mortgagors, who had obtained the benefits of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, in a case in which some of the mortgagors had, while others had not, obtained this benefit, cannot put the mortgagee in a worse position than he would have occupied if he had allowed the integrity of the mortgage to be broken up by permitting the holder of a share in the equity of redemption to redeem that share on payment of a proportionate amount of the debt. In such a case, the mortgagee is entitled to proceed against the share of the mortgagors, who have not obtained the benefit of the Act, for a proportionate share of the mortgage-money.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Jhansi, dated the 28th of July 1911.

Mr. D. C. Banerji, for the Appellant.
Mr. Sawhny, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for foreclosure on a mortgage, dated the 21st of May 1877. The first defendant, Ram Din, was impleaded as heir of the mortgagor, and there were some 19 other defendants impleaded as subsequent transferees. For the purpose of the appeal now before me, it is sufficient to say that Mahadeo and Bhairon, defendants Nos. 13 and 14, have acquired the equity of redemption in one half of the property originally mortgaged while the remaining defendants are interested in the other half. The property in question is situated in the district of Jalaun and it has been found that Mahadeo and Bhairon took advantage of the provisions of Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act (I of 1903). No claim was preferred against them in respect of the mortgage now in suit and there is no doubt that they are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 12 of the said Act; that is to say, every claim against them in respect of this deed must be deemed for all purposes and at all times to have been duly discharged.

The Court of first instance, having found against the defendants on a number of other points raised, dismissed the suit as against the defendants Mahadeo and Bhairon, but held the remaining one half of the property to be liable for one half of the mortgage-debt and framed a decree accordingly. The remaining defendants, when appealing to the District Judge on other points, did not raise any plea to the effect that the failure of the plaintiffs to bring any claim under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act against Mahadeo and Bhairon had the effect of extinguishing the entire mortgage, and so making it impossible for the plaintiff to recover anything under its terms, even from those defendants who had never applied for, or obtained, the benefit of the Encumbered Estates Act. The learned District Judge, however, allowed this plea to be taken before him in argument, and I do not think that in so doing, he acted outside the discretion vested in him by law. He found against the plaintiffs on the point and, on this ground alone and without determining any of the other questions raised before him in appeal, he has dismissed the plaintiff's suit altogether. The same question was before me in the case of Amar Chand v. Tulshi Ram, S. A. No. 858 of 1911, decided by me on the 17th May 1912. I there expressed the opinion that the failure of the mortgagee to make any claim against those of his mortgagors, who obtained the benefit of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, in a case in which some of the mortgagors had while others had not, obtained this benefit, could not put the mortgagee in a worse position than he would have occupied if he had, allowed the integrity of the mortgage to be broken up by permitting the holders of a share in the equity of redemption to redeem that share on payment of a proportionate amount of the debt. I am still of the same opinion. The failure of the plaintiffs in this case to make any claim as against Mahadeo and Bhairon, has the same effect in law as if the plaintiffs had accepted from these two defendants their proportionate share of the mortgage-debt and had handed over their share of the property freed from the encumberance. The mere fact that the plaintiffs as mortgagees might have held the share in the possession of Mahadeo and Bhairon liable for the entire mortgage-debt and left it to these defendants to proceed against the remaining persons interested in the mortgage property for contribution, does not, I think, affect the question now before me. The Special Judges under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act had very wide equitable jurisdiction; and, as a matter of fact, a special return was furnished by them showing the difference between the sums awarded by them and the sums which would have been decreed by a Civil Court in respect of the same claims. In the present case, if the plaintiffs had taken notice of the proclamation of Mahdeo and Bhairon under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, and had brought forward their claim, it would have mattered very little whether they formally claimed the entire debt or voluntarily split up the mortgage. The award of the Special Judge would have been based upon their equitable claim to one-half of the mortgage-debt against one-half of the security. For these reasons, I hold the conduct of the mortgagees, in failing to bring any claim under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, has had the effect of breaking up the integrity of the mortgage and that they are now entitled to proceed against one-half of the mortgaged property for recovery of one-half of the debt. I am confirmed in my opinion by the decision of this Court in the case of Mahand Rao v. Janki Bai (1). The learned District Judge endeavours to distinguish this case, and points out that the particular question now in issue was rather taken for granted than formally decided in that case. It is abundantly clear, however, that if the learned District Judge is right in his decision in the present case, then the reported case above referred to was wrongly decided I accept this appeal and, setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, remand this case under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for a decision on the merits on the pleas actually taken up by the contesting defendants in their memorandum of appeal to that Court. Costs will abide the event.

Case remanded.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17 (e)—Construction of document—Composition deed—Test—Transfer of property to trustees for payment of debts—Registration.

The essential test of a composition deed is that there ought to be a compounding of debts due.

A deed, by which the owner of certain property transferred it to trustees for the purpose of enabling them to pay off his creditors, and in which there was nothing whatever to show that there was any composition, any settlement with the creditors, that the debtor should pay less than he owed to them and that they agreed to accept that composition, is not a composition-deed but merely a conveyance or a trust-deed and is compulsorily registrable.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Surat, in Appeal No. 101 of 1908, confirming that passed by the Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Civil Suit No. 254 of 1905.

Messrs. Inverarity and Weldon, with them Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Appellants

Mr. H. C. Coyjee, with him Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for Respondents Nos. 1 & 2.

JUDGMENT.—It is clear upon the terms of Exhibit 67 that it cannot be regarded in law as a composition deed. All that appears from its recitals and terms is that the owner of the property transferred it to the trustees for the purpose of enabling those trustees to pay off his creditors. There is nothing whatever in the language of the deed to show that there was any composition, any settlement with the creditors that the debtor should pay less than he owed to them and that they agreed to accept that composition. The essential test of a composition deed is that there ought to be a compounding of debts due. Of that there is no trace whatever so far as the language of this document is concerned. It might be regarded as a conveyance or as a trust-deed, i. e., a trust made by the debtor for the purpose of enabling the trustee to pay off his creditors. Form either point of view, it was compulsorily registrable, and not having been registered, it could not be admitted in evidence.

On these grounds, the decree must be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout upon the respondents.

Construction of deed—Bond—Simple mortgage—Charge—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 31, Sch. I, Art. 132.

A. executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of B. in 1880. In 1887, A. executed a bond in favour of B. which contained the following provisions: "If I do not pay on due date then when I come to redeem the land mortgaged, I shall pay this money with interest. Until I pay this money with interest, I shall not pay the mortgage-money.....When I pay, I shall pay the mortgage-money in a lump sum and redeem the fields...On these conditions I have written this dastawez makfuli:"

Held, that the bond was not a simple mortgage although it may have effected a charge.

Suits governed by Article 132 of the Limitation Act are not entitled to the benefit of section 31 of that Act.

When the construction of a deed is in question, rulings on the construction of deeds couched in different language are of very little use.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Jaunpur, dated the 13th June 1911.

Mr. Gokal Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Purushottam Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the appellants upon a document executed in favour of their ancestor, Sheo Mangal Singh, by the first respondent, Sarup Singh, on September 20th, 1887. The appellants contended that the document was a simple mortgage and they claimed a decree for sale of certain land in two villages. The suit was resisted by the respondents on the ground that the document effected neither a mortgage nor a charge. The Munsif held that it effected either a mortgage or a charge and he gave the appellants a decree for sale of a part of the property, the rest of the property having passed into the hands of a purchaser for value without notice of the document in question. On appeal, the District Judge held that the document effected neither a mortgage nor a charge and he dismissed the suit. Before stating the terms of the document in question, it is necessary to point out that in 1880, the executant of the document had made an usufructuary mortgage of the land now sought to be sold in favour of the ancestor of the appellants and placed him in possession and the mortgagee was in possession at the date of the document no win question. This document, after reciting that the executant had taken Rs. 49 from Sheo Mangal Singh, contains a promise to re-pay the money with interest on or before June 23rd, 1883. Then follows this provision:—"If I do not pay on due date, then when I come to redeem the land mortgaged in Mouzas Ramnagar and Mohinidpore, I shall pay this money with interest. Until I pay this money with interest, I shall not pay the mortgage-money..... ..... When I pay, I shall pay the mortgage-money in a lump sum and redeem the fields ..... On these conditions, I have written this dastawez makfuli."

I have been referred to a number of rulings on the construction of different deeds but it appears to me that rulings on the construction of deeds couched in different languages are of very little use in a case of this kind. The rulings referred to are chiefly useful as showing that it has been for many years understood that certain words are used to denote a mortgage or a charge. It appears to me that the use of the words "dastawez makfuli" probably indicates an intention to make either a mortgage or a charge. But taking all the terms of the document together, I am unable to hold that it amounts to a mortgage. If it is a mortgage at all, it must be a simple mortgage. It seems to me it is not a simple mortgage for there is no express or implied agreement that in any event the creditor shall be entitled to bring the property to sale. On the contrary, the provision restricting the right to redeem the usufructuary mortgage upon payment of the amount of this document indicates that a sale was not contemplated. Nor is it likely that the executant of this document would have agreed that the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property should be liable to be sold at the end of one year in case the money was not paid. After the passages set out above, there is a passage in which it is agreed that if the money is not paid, the creditor shall be entitled to recover the money from the executant and from his moveable and immoveable property. If a mortgage had been intended, I should have expected to find this clause giving the creditor a right to sell some specific porperty. But it does nothing of the kind. In my opinoin, this document is not a mortgage. It may have effected a charge. But if so, the suit is barred by limitation, for the cause of action accrued as long ago as 1883 and the present suit was not brought till 1910. The relevant Article of the Schedule to the Limitation Act would be Article 132 and suits governed by that Article are not entitled to the benefit of section 31 of the Limitation Act of 1908. Another possible view suggested by the decision in Mahabir Prashad v. Durbijai Rai (1) is that the appellants may have a right of suit hereafter if the usufructuary mortgage is redeemed and the money due on this document is not paid. I am of opinoin that the present suit was rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of claim by plaintiff—Right of plaintiff to resile from withdrawal before Court acts on the withdrawal petition.

Per Sundara Aiyar, J.—A mere petition withdrawing a suit would not debar the party making the petition from prosecuting the suit unless, in the meanwhile, the suit has been dismissed by the Court. He would have a locus penitentiæ until his petition is acted upon by the Court.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A plaintiff, after he makes a petition withdrawing a suit, cannot withdraw this petition except on good grounds, nor can he be allowed to play fast and loose with the litigation launched by him at his sweet will and pleasure.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly, in A. S. No. 630 of 1909, preferred against that of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevelly, in O. S. No. 44 of 1908.

Mr. M. B. Doraiswmy Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SUNDARA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs are two legatees under the Will of one Peramu Ammal. The defendant is the widow of Peramu Ammal's son. Peramu Ammal was entitled to half the property of her son and the defendant to the other half. The plaintiffs instituted this suit to recover from the defendant the property which they claimed to be entitled to under Peramu Ammal's Will. Both Courts have found that the Will executed by Peramu Ammal was a valid testamentary disposition and disallowed the defendant's plea that Peramu Ammal was of unsound mind and not competent to execute a Will.

It is urged in second appeal, with reference to the finding on the question of Peramu Ammal's testamentary capacity, that the lower Appellate Court ought to have received in evidence certain documents which would establish the defendant's plea. The lower Courts, relying on the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses and disbelieving the evidence adduced by the defendant, arived at the conclusion that Peramu Ammal was in a sound and disposing state of mind at the time she executed the Will, Exhibit A. Amongst the reasons given for disbelieving the defendant's evidence, is one that Peramu Ammal was not treated for insanity by the Hospital Assistant of the place where she was living. The documents, which, it is stated, ought to have been received in evidence, are intended to show that, as a matter of fact, she was treated by the Hospital Assistant as an out-patient. An application was put in the lower Appellate Court supported by one affidavit which stated that the documents tendered in the Appellate Court were found to be missing in the Court of first instance when they were required. No attempt seems to have been made in the District Munsif's Court for getting an adjournment to enable the defendant to find out the missing documents. The defendant concluded his case by examining witnesses to prove Peramu Ammal's state of mind. I cannot hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, in the circumstances, in refusing to receive these documents in evidence in appeal. Nor would the documents show anything more than that Peramu Ammal was suffering from melancholia, a fact which would not go sufficiently far to establish the defendant's plea that she was of unsound mind. I must, therefore, hold that the finding is not open to any legal objection.

The next point urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant is, that the 1st plaintiff, who was entitled to half of the property sued for, under Peramu Ammal's Will, put in, before the suit came on for hearing, a petition withdrawing his claim and that the Munsif was bound consequently to dismiss the 1st plaintiff's claim and had no right to accept his withdrawal of the petition without holding an inquiry. As to the question whether there were good grounds for allowing him to withdraw, the Subordinate Judge finds that the Munsif had proper reasons for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw from the withdrawal of his claim. Whether it was so or not, it is clear that, when the suit was called on for hearing, the 1st plaintiff wished and was ready to prosecute his suit. It is argued that he was not at liberty, without good grounds, to resile from his withdrawal. Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code entitles the plaintiff to withdraw or abandon his suit or any portion of his claim, and, if he does so, the Court is empowered to direct him to pay the costs of the defendant. But the question is "can the 1st plaintiff be said to have withdrawn his suit or plaint in this case?" Before the Munsif acted upon the petition, the 1st plaintiff expressed a desire to prosecute the suit. There is nothing in the Code which would entitle the defendant to insist that a petition of withdrawal not acted upon by the Court must be enforced as against the party putting it in. I am inclined to hold that a mere petition of withdrawal would not debar the party putting it in from prosecuting the suit unless, in the meanwhile, the suit had been dismissed by the Court. He would apparently have a locus penitentiæ until his petition is acted upon by the Court. I must, therefore, overrule this contention also. I dismiss the second appeal without costs.

SADASIVA AIYER, J.—I am inclined to hold that a plaintiff, after he puts in a petition for withdrawing a suit, cannot withdraw his withdrawal petition except on good grounds and cannot be allowed to play fast and loose with the litigation launched by him at his sweet will and pleasure. But, in the present case, the Subordinate Judge finds that the Munsif allowed such withdrawal on good grounds; and nothing has been urged before us showing that the Munsif had no such good grounds for allowing the withdrawal of the withdrawal petition. Even the grounds 1 and 3 of the appeal memo. do not raise the contention that there were no such good grounds and merely allege that the Court has no power at all to allow the withdrawal of a withdrawal petition. I would also dismiss the second appeal without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Assignment of mortgagee's right—Registration—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 8, 54—Intangible property.

The interest of a simple mortgagee is plainly an intangible thing within the meaning of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and the transfer of such interest must be made by a registered instrument.

Subramaniam v. Perumal Reddi, 18 M. 454; Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari, 24 M. 449; 11 M. L. J. 132, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Saharanpur, dated 17th November 1911.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 249 on the basis of a simple mortgage made on the 19th of August 1885. The mortgagees transferred all their rights under the mortgage to the plaintiffs by an unregistered deed of sale, dated the 2nd of December 1898. The present suit was instituted in August 1910. If by the assignment only a right to proceed against the mortgagors personally passed to the plaintiffs, the suit is admittedly barred by limitation. The question for decision is whether the unregistered deed was sufficient to pass to the plaintiffs the interests of the mortgagees under the deed of August 19th, 1885. If the decision in Subramaniam v. Perumal Reddi (1) is correct, this question must be answered in the affirmative. But that decision was disapproved by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in the later case of Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (2). The remarks of the learned Judge may have been, as contended by the Counsel for the appellants, no more than obiter dicta, but, in my opinion, his view of the law is correct and the earlier decision in Subramaniam v. Perumal Reddi (1) is erroneous. In the earlier case, the Court relied on section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act. It appears to me that that section cannot be read so as to override the provisions of section 54 of the same Act. The interest of a simple mortgagee is plainly an intangible thing within the meaning of section 54 and the transfer of it can be made only by a registered instrument. The result is that the plaintiffs by the assignment in their favour acquired no right to sue as mortgagees. In my opinion, the decisions of the Courts below are correct. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. P. L. Banerji (with him Mr. Bajpai), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal (with him Mr. Vishnu Ram Mehta), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On June 9th, 1908, the plaintiffs sold half a village to the defendant, Badri Das, for Rs. 6,900, of which Rs. 1,400 were paid in cash to the plaintiffs and the balance Rs. 5,500 was left in the hands of the defendant on account of the amount due on a prior mortgage of the whole village held by one Kanhya Lal. On the 18th of June 1908, the defendant deposited Rs. 5,500 in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. By this time, Kanhya Lal had died leaving an infant heir. The child's guardian refused to accept the money saying that a larger sum was due on the mortgage and the plaintiffs put in an application stating that the whole of the sum deposited was not due to the mortgagee, but that accounts should be taken and the amount found due paid to the mortgagee and the balance paid to the plaintiffs. The Courts below have found that there was no agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant that they would go to the mortgagee and settle accounts with him and the defendant would re-pay the balance, if any, remaining in his hands to the plaintiffs. Kanhya Lal's heir sued upon the mortgage impleading both the present plaintiffs and the defendant. The latter did not defend the suit. The present plaintiffs and the mortgagee entered into a compromise according to which Rs. 5,556 were agreed to be due on account of the mortgage-money and a further sum on account of costs and in default of payment, the amount was to be recovered in the first instance by sale of that half of the village which had been sold to the defendant. A decree was prepared accordingly and in execution of that decree, the defendant's half share in the village was sold for Rs. 3,000.

The plaintiffs applied to have the sale set aside, but they subsequently abandoned the application and they brought the present suit in July 1910 for the recovery of Rs. 2,500 being, as they alleged, the balance of the amount still due from the defendant, the amount of costs incurred by them in the previous suit and the amount of revenue paid by them for the defendant's half share of the village and interest making a total of Rs. 3,849 odd. The Court of first instance decreed the claim and the lower Appellate Court confirmed that decree with a slight modification.

In second appeal, it is contended on behalf of the defendant, that under the sale-deed in his favour, he was not bound to find more than Rs. 5,500 for the redemption of Kanhya Lal's mortgage, that he had done all that was required of him when he deposited this sum in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of of Property Act and that he was not bound to discharge the decree obtained by Kanhya Lal's heir as the amount due under the decree exceeded Rs 5,500, that under the sale-deed in favour of the defendant, it was the duty of plaintiffs vendors to give a clear title to the 8-annas share which they sold to the defendant and all that they could do was to call upon the defendant to contribute the sum of Rs. 5,500 towards the redemption of Kanhya Lal's mortgage. The defendant has relied upon a decision of the Privy Council in Muhammad Siddiq Khan v. Muhammad Nasir-Ullah Khan (1) which, he says, exactly covers this case. The plaintiffs-respondents, on the other hand, contend that under the sale-deed the defendant was bound to redeem the mortgage held by Kanhya Lal even if he had to pay a sum exceeding Rs. 5,500 in order to do so and they rely upon the second clause in the sale-deed which is to the effect that if any further charge were found to exist on the property and the defendant had to pay more than Rs. 5,500, he would be entitled to recover the balance from the vendors, and the plaintiffs contend that this case is distinguishable from the case decided by the Privy Council. It seems to us impossible to hold that the second condition in the sale-deed made it incumbent on the purchaser to redeem Kanhya Lal's mortgage even if he had to pay more than the sum left in his hands by the vendors for the purpose. The clause in question gives him only the right which he would have had if this clause had not been inserted in the deed. As a purchaser of the property, said to be free of all incumbrances except one for Rs. 5,500, he would have been entitled, if he paid a larger sum in order to clear the title, to claim the balance from his vendors. We have referred to the printed record of the case decided by the Privy Council and we are unable to distinguish that case from the present one. Pandit Sundar Lal endeavoured to distinguish the two cases on the ground that in that case, both this Court and the Privy Council held that it was part of the contract between the parties that the vendors should pay off the mortgages and he relied on the fact that oral evidence of such an arrangement was given at the trial. On referring to the record, we find that this Court held that the vendors had agreed to discharge the mortgages, not on the strength of the oral evidence, the admissibility of which seemed doubtful, but on the terms of the sale-deed itself. The Privy Council, in their judgment, confirmed the finding of this Court. Whether the Privy Council proceeded upon the oral evidence or not, we think that this case is not distinguishable from that case. There, as here, a sum of money was left in the hands of the purchaser for the purpose of redeeming the prior mortgage. It turned out that the amount due was far in excess of the amount left in the hands of the purchasers. There, as here, it was the duty of the vendors to give a clear title to the purchaser subject only to the payment by the purchaser of the sum left in his hands. In the present case, the difference between the amount left in the defendant's hands and the amount found due on the mortgage is small but the decision should be the same whether the difference is great or small. Pandit Sundar Lal declined to argue that the defendant in this case would have been bound to find a sum of say Rs. 10,000 for the redemption of Kanhya Lal's mortgage. The plaintiffs, after a decree had been passed on Kanhya Lal's mortgage, should have paid into Court the difference between the amount due and the amount left in the hands of the defendant and then have called on the defendant to pay the sum which was in his hands. They did nothing of the kind. It was their duty to give the defendant a clear title and it was their fault that the defendant's property was sold. In our opinion, the suit should have been dismissed. We allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 75—Instalment-bond—Default of payment—Waiver—Limitation.

An instalment bond provided that in case of default in payment of any instalment, the whole amount of the bond should be paid at once. None of the instalments were paid. The creditors, after the lapse of more than 3 years from the date of the first default, brought a suit to recover some of the instalments:

Held, that, in the absence of waiver, the suit was barred by limitation.

Mr. Purushotam Das Tondan, (for Mr. Dmodar Das), for the Applicant.

Mr. Parmeshwor Dyal (for Mr. Haribans Sahai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the applicant on an instalment-bond, dated October 28th, 1895, for the recovery of instalments said to be due for the Sambat years 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968. The applicant alleged that the instalments had been regularly paid from the date of the bond up to and including 1964 Sambat, that is to say, from 1952 to 1964 Sambat. It has been found, however, by the Court below that no instalments have ever been paid. The question is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The Court below has held that it is barred relying on the decisions in Radha Bai v. Kamod Singh (1) and Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab Chandar Chuckerbutty (2). On behalf of the applicant, it is contended that the case is not governed by the decision of this Court just mentioned, and that the decision of the Calcutta High Court is inconsistent with the decision of this Court in Aiudhiya v. Kunjal (3). In the last mentioned case, a bond payable by instalments contained a provision that in default of payment of any one instalment, it would be in the power of the creditors to sue for the whole amount due under the bond (Mahajan mazkur ko akhtiyar hogi). It was held that this provision did not mean that the creditor was bound to sue for the whole in case of default of one instalment and that he was at liberty, notwithstanding that provision, to sue for the instalments as they fell due. The bond in the present case provides that in case of default in payment of any instalment, the debtor will pay the whole amount of bond at once. In the course of the judgment in the case last mentioned, Knox and Aikman, JJ., observed:— "It is conceivable that a bond might be so worded as to compel a creditor to sue for the whole amount immediately if any default occurred. The bond with which we have to deal is not so worded." The decision appears to me to amount to this; that Article 75 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act does not apply to a case where only an option is left to the creditor to sue for the whole amount of the bond. The Calcutta High Court, in the case above-mentioned, has held that Article 75 does apply even where the creditor is not bound to sue for the whole amount of the bond but is entitled to do so if he pleases. The bond in the present case appears to me to fall within Article 75, for it provides that if default be made in payment of any instalment, the whole amount of the bond shall be paid. It does not merely give the creditor an option to sue. It seems to me that when a bond is found to fall within Article 75, that Article must be applied subject, of course, to the provision as to waiver in the third column of the Schedule. In the Court below, it was not suggested that there had been any waiver in this case. In this Court, it was suggested that the institution of the present suit was a waiver of the benefit of the provision in the bond. I cannot accept this contention, for when this suit was instituted, the whole amount of the bond had been due for over ten years. A creditor cannot avoid the effect of Article 75 by bringing a suit for instalments many years after the whole amount of the bond has become payable. In my opinion, the Court below was right in holding that this suit was barred by limitation. The case appears to be covered by the decision of this Court in Radha Bai v. Kamod Singh(1). This application is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Forcible re-entry, right of landlord to—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 138—Bona fide payment of rent—Inquiry, scope of—Parties—Lessor when to be impleaded in lessee's suit against tenants—Appeal, second—Question of law—Determination of legal right.

A talukdar leased the collection of rents of a certain village to the plaintiff for a certain period and it was provided in the lease that in case of breach of certain terms of the lease or of the expiry of the term fixed, the talukdar would have a right of re-entry.

Before the expiry of the term, the talukdar took forcible possession of the village and began to collect rent from the tenants. The lessee then sued the tenants for the rent:

Held, (1) that the lessee was entitled to obtain decrees, inasmuch as the relation of landlord and tenant had not ceased between the lessee and the tenants inasmuch as the lessee had not been, in due course of law, ejected and the lease only provided for re-entry in case the lessee agreed to give up the possession and not for re-entry by force;

(2) that section 138 of the Oudh Rent Act had no application to the facts of the case, and the talukdar had no right to be joined as a defendant in the plaintiff's suit.

The inquiry contemplated by section 138 of the Rent Act is an inquiry relating to a period prior to that for which rent is claimed.

Shah Hamid Ahmed v. Baij Nath, Rent Act Ruling (1893) No. 66, followed.

The question whether a legal right had determined is a question of law and not of fact and a decision on such point is open to second appeal.

If a lease reserves to the lessor the right of entry in case of a breach of a covenant, the result of the breach is at best to confer upon the lessor the right of re-entry, and not to entitle the lessor to make a forcible entry. If the lessee resists the exercise of the right to re-enter, the lessor's only remedy is to enforce his right to re-enter by a suit in ejectment.

A license by a tenant to a landlord to eject him without process of law is void and can be no answer to a charge of forcible entry.

JUDGMENT.—Rent Appeals Nos 9 to 24 of 1912 have been heard together. They can be decided by the same order. The facts are as follows. Raja Maneshur Bakhsh Singh, Talukdar of Mallanpur, executed a theka of the village of Sheopur in the Bahraich District in favour of Habuibullah Shah. The theka was executed for the Fasli years 1313 to 1319 inclusive. On the 3rd May 1911, Raja Maneshur Bakhsh Singh instituted a suit for arrears on the basis of this theka in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich against Habibullah Shah. The 4th July 1911 was fixed for evidence. On the 20th June 1911, Raja Maneshur Bakhsh Singh died, and was succeeded by his son Raja Debi Bakhsh Singh, the present Talukdar. Owing to the fact that the name of Raja Debi Bakhsh Singh was not brought on the record, the suit was dismissed for default, but was eventually reinstated by an order of the Deputy Commissioner. An application was filed against the order of the Deputy Commissioner to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The Judicial Commissioner reversed that order. A review was allowed against the order of the reversal but the reversal was subsequently confirmed. Raja Debi Bakhsh Singh has since obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the dismissal of the suit. Under the authority of the theka, Habibullah Shah instituted eight suits for arrears of rent against eight tenants of the village. The arrears were for the Kharif and Rabi of 1318 Fasli except in the case of a certain Beni, against whom arrears were claimed in addition for 1316 Fasli. These suits were instituted in the HABIBULLAH SHAH v. SURJI.

Court of Syed Zain-ul-Ibad, Assistant Collector of Bahraich, on the 21st July 1911. Written statements were filed on the 16th August 1911. It was pleaded in the written statements that from the beginning of the Rabi 1318, the Talukdar had been in possession of the village and that these eight tenants had paid him the rents in question for 1318 Fasli. On 23rd August 1911, Raja Debi Bakhsh Singh applied to be made a party, asserting that his father had taken possession of the village in February 1911, that he had dispossessed the thekadar, and had collected the rents for 1318 Fasli. The plaintiff opposed the application on the 9th September 1911, on the ground that the term of his theka had not expired, that no mutation had taken place, and that he was still in possession. On the 9th September 1911, the Talukdar was made a party. The following issues were framed:—

(1). Whether the plaintiff is entitled to rent for the whole of 1318 Fasli or only up to the Kharif?

(2). Whether the defendant has paid the whole amount of rent due by him?

(3). Whether Raja Debi Bakhsh Singh Talukdar has realised in good faith the rent in respect of Rabi 1318 Fasli from the defendant?

(4). What is really due from the defendant?

(5). Whether the plaintiff was legally ejectd by the Mallaupur estate and when?

Evidence was taken and judgment delivered on 12th October 1911. The first issue was decided in the plaintiff's favour. On the second issue, the following decision was arrived at, which covers the ground raised in the fifth issue although the fifth issue is never mentioned in the judgment. It was decided that the Talukdar had ejected the plaintiff in 1318 Fasli bat that the ejectment was illegal and that, therefore, the defendants were still liable to pay their rents to the plaintiff. The same ground is covered by the decision on the third issue, in which it was decided that Raja Debi Baksh Singh had not received any rent in good faith. On the 4th issue, certain sums were found due against individual defendants. Decrees were passed accordingly. Against these decrees, 16 appeals were filed to the District Judge of Gonda. The learned District Judge decided these appeals upon one point only. He stated in his judgment that the primary question for determination was whether the Talukdar was legally entitled to resume possession of the village and make collections. He continued that the fact that he had regained possession was not open to doubt. He found the Talukdar was entitled to resume possession under the terms of the theka and that he did resume possession, and that the thekadar had no rights subsisting under the theka with regard to the suits in question. He accordingly dismissed all the suits. I note that, although he refers to the point in his judgment, he overlooked in his final order the fact that a decree had been passed against Beni for a small amount relating to the arrears of 1316 Fasli, a period not covered by his order. The present 16 appeals have now been filed against the learned District Judge's decision.

Mr. St. G. Jackson, who appears for the appellant, states that he does not press the appeals in respect of sums greater than the sums awarded by the Assistant Collector and that he will be satisfied if decrees are granted to his client as granted by the Assistant Collector. I find that the lower Courts should not have applied the provisions of section 138 of the Oudh Rent Act. The facts clearly establish that the third party, that is to say, the Raja, had not been actually and in good faith receiving and enjoying the rents up to the time of the commencement of the suit. The inquiry contemplated by section 138, Local Act XXII of 1886, is an "inquiry relating to a period prior to that for which rent is claimed by the plaintiff. In a suit in which the tenant has not paid the rent sued for to the third person, the inquiry directed by section 138 obviously must relate to such period, and, therefore, in a suit in which the tenant has paid such rent to the third person, the inquiry must relate to the same period. It cannot be that in the one case, the inquiry is to relate to one period and in the other case to another period." The above is a quotation from the decision of this Court in Shah Hamid Ahmed v. Baij Nath (1). In these circumstances, the Raja had no right to be joined as a defendant in these suits under section 133. The defence put up in all the cases was a denial of the plaintiff's right to receive the rents on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant previously existing between the parties had determined; and it was upon the defendants to establish their plea by some affirmative proof. The issue was whether the right of the plaintiff to receive rents ceased to exist. If it had, the suits were bound to fail, otherwise the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The question whether a legal right had determined, is a question of law and not of fact, and as such is open to decision in second appeal. All that appears is that early in the Rabi season of 1318 Fasli, the Raja gave notice through his agents to the tenants not to pay their rents to the plaintiff and the explanation of this action on the part of the Raja is that, under the terms of his agreement with the plaintiff, he was entitled to re-enter on breach of some of the covenants contained in the lease. It was alleged that the lessee had committed a breach of the covenant to pay the rent and that the Raja had re-entered without seeking the intervention of the Court in the manner above described. I do not find that these acts amounted to an extermination of the plaintiff's right to collect the rents. Even assuming that there was on the part of the lessee a breach of the covenant as alleged, (I am not satisfied upon the evidence that there had been any such breach), the result was at the best to confer upon the lessor the right of re-entry. He could only obtain a right to have re-vested in himself the same estate as was vested in him at the time of granting of the lease. The lessee might have submitted to the lessor's exercise of the right to re-enter, but the evidence shows that he obviously did not do so. The lessor was certainly not entitled to make a forcible entry. If the lessee resisted the exercise of the right to re-enter, the lessor's only remedy was to enforce his right to re-enter by a suit in ejectment. Had the lease in the present case, instead of being a lease of the right to collect rents, been a lease of lands, possession of which had been delivered to the lessee, the lessor would certainly have not had the right to re-enter forcibly. A license by a tenant to a landlord to eject him without process of law is void, and can be no answer to a charge of forcible entry. The ground is that such a license is contrary to public policy as being calculated to lead to a breach of the public peace. The same principle applies to the present case. The lessee's right must be deemed to continue, until it is terminated in one or other of the methods which the law recognizes as legitimate to that Act. Thus in all these cases, the defendants have failed to establish that the relation of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and themselves has determined and this being so, the first Court properly decreed the claims.

I restore the decrees of the first Court in so far as they have been disturbed by the orders of the learned District Judge. These appeals are decided accordingly. Costs to follow the result.

Remand—Remand by Appellate Court not on a preliminary point, validity of—Settlement out of Court, inquiry into—Evidence not placed on record—Remand for re-trial.

An order of remand may, in some cases, be made by an Appellate Court, even where the disposal has not been on a point which can be strictly called a preliminary point.

Kuppelan v. Kunjuvalli, 9 M. L. T. 373, 2 M. W. N 199; 9 Ind. Cas. 790, followed.

In an inquiry as to whether a dispute between the parties was settled out of Court, the Munsif looked at a receipt and, without exhibiting it in evidence or taking other evidence, decided that there had been a settlement out of Court. On appeal, the District Judge remanded the suit for re-hearing and disposal:

Held, that the District Judge had power to order the remand.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Kurnool, in A. S. No. 148 of 1908, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Kurnool, in O. S. No. 767 of 1907.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Parthasarathy Iyenger, for the Respondent.

GOPI NATH v. GUR PRASHAD.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif appears to have looked at a receipt and construed it as a settlement out of Court, and upon it determined the issue whether the settlement after suit is true but he did not exhibit it in evidence in the suit or take any other evidence. It is not now alleged that this course was taken by consent of the parties or that the parties agreed that the matter should be disposed of on the construction of the receipt alone.

The District Judge appears to have seen the receipt and considered that it is not a record of the terms of a settlement between the parties and, holding that the plaintiff should be allowed to prove that the document represented only a partial settlement, has remanded the suit for re-hearing and disposal.

Before us it is contended that the District Munsif, having determined the issue as to the settlement, has not disposed of the suit on a preliminary point and that, therefore, the District Judge had no power to order a remand.

But the decision in Kuppelan v. Kunjuvalli (1) is an authority for holding that there are cases in which an order of remand may be made even where the disposal has not gone on a point which can strictly be called a preliminary point, and this, we think, is one of those cases. Here there seems to have been no regular hearing of the matter and the evidence on which the disposal was made was not placed on the record. This procedure is so irregular that we think an order for a complete re-trial is required, and on that ground, we confirm the decision of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Certain mortgages were executed by an insolvent judgment-debtor during the continuance of an attachment of the mortgaged property by certain decree-holders, who contended in insolvency proceedings that the mortgages were void against them under section 64, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that according to the provisions of section 16(2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the claims, which the creditors were able to enforce under the Civil Procedure Code, ceased to be enforceable upon the making of the order of adjudication and the creditors could only work out their remedy under the conditions laid down in the Insolvency Act and they could not, therefore, claim that the mortgages were void against them;

(2) that if the property were sold up, the mortgagees would have the same remedy against the assets realized by sale as against the property itself;

(3) that in all such cases where claims were set up by the mortgagees, the provisions of section 31 of the Insolvency Act must be strictly complied with.

An attaching creditor has no lien or charge upon the debtor's property which he attaches and is not entitled to rank as a secured creditor.

It is expedient in the interest of all the creditors that the Court should be allowed to bring the insolvent's mortgaged property to sale and give the mortgagee the same remedy against the sale-proceeds as he had against the property itself.

The rights of secured creditors are not affected in any way by the passing of an order of adjudication.

Babu Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jagmohan Nath Chak, Hargobind Das, holding brief of Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of certain orders passed by the District Judge of Lucknow in insolvency proceedings. One Gur Prasad presented a petition in insolvency on the 23rd August 1910, and an order of adjudication was made on 28th October in the same year.

GOPI NATH v. GUR PRASHAD.

The Court appointed a Receiver and the creditors were directed to appear before him and offer proof of their debts in order that a schedule might be prepared. Various creditors came before the Receiver and filed affidavits in support of their claims with the result that a list of debts, twenty in all, was prepared and laid before the Judge for orders.

The Judge considered the list and the Receiver's report and ultimately framed a schedule and gave orders as to the manner in which the various debts were to be paid.

The appeals now before us are directed against the scheme of liquidation prepared by the Judge.

The assets available for distribution consisted of some Rs. 8,000 odd realised by sale of immoveable property of the insolvent. One of the items making up the total was a sum of Rs. 5,601-9, proceeds of a sale of certain immoveable property carried out by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow. This property had been attached long before the insolvent filed his petition by Baldeo Das and Basant Lal (two of the appellants in Appeal No. 27) in execution of a decree amounting to Rs. 1,484 odd. The Additional Subordinate Judge, under the orders of the District Court, sold the entire property so attached and remitted the net proceeds to the Judge.

The other properties of the insolvent were sold by the Receiver under the orders of the Court.

One of the points raised in these appeals is in connection with four mortgage-debts due to four creditors, Jugal Kishore, Ram Prasad, Dowarka and Gopi Nath Khattri. It is stated that these mortgages were effected after the date of the attachment made by Baldeo Das and Basant Lal and it is argued that the mortgages are void as against the attaching creditors as having been made at a time when the insolvent was hopelessly involved. It is admitted that these transactions do not fall within the purview of section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act so they cannot be held to be void under that section. It was suggested that they were void as against the attaching creditors under section 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but we do not think this argument can be accepted, for according to the provisions of section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the claims, which the creditors may have been able to enforce under the Civil Procedure Code, ceased to be so enforcible upon the making of the order of adjudication. The creditors could only work out their remedy under the conditions laid down in the Provincial Insolvency Act. We do not think, therefore, that it is open to these attaching creditors to claim in these insolvency proceedings that the mortgages in question were void as against them.

It is not contended, nor indeed could it be contended, that the attaching creditors have any right to preference in the distribution of the insolvent's assets. An attaching creditor has no lien or charge upon the debtor's property which he attaches and is not entitled to rank as a secured creditor.

A second point taken in these appeals is that the mortgagees mentioned above were not entitled to participate at all in the dividends because they failed to comply with the provisions of section 31, sub-section 6 of the Act.

Under section 31, a secured creditor has the option of following any one of three courses. He may realise his security and prove for the balance of his debt, if any. He may relinquish his security and prove for his whole debt. Or he may assess the value of his security and ask for a dividend in respect of the balance.

No doubt these mortgagees did not in the present case comply strictly with the letter of the law. The Court sold the property of its own motion and so deprived the mortgagees of all opportunity of realising their securities themselves. But they did not offer to relinquish their securities nor did they make any valuation of them.

The fact appears to be that neither the creditors nor the Court were aware of, or understood, the procedure laid down in the Act and it is a pity that when these mortgagees appeared with proofs of their debts, they were not asked which particular course they desired to follow.

The Judge treated them as if they had applied to be allowed to realise their securities and to prove for the balance of their debts and, in a way, has allowed them the same remedy against the sale-proceeds, as they might have pursued against the property itself which constituted their securities. The Act, it is said, does not recognise this mode of procedure but it does not appear to us to have been irregular or unlawful.

Obviously, procceedings in insolvency would be greatly protracted if the Court had to wait till the mortgagees had brought suits against their mortgagors and got decrees to enable them to bring the property to sale and it is expedient in the interests of all the creditors that the Court should be allowed to bring the property to sale and give the mortgagee the same remedy against the sale-proceeds as he had against the property itself. This procedure is recognised in England where the Court may direct inquiry into the claim of a mortgagee and may, if satisfied, that there ought to be a sale of the property, direct a sale to be made and apply the sale-proceeds in discharge of the debt. The mortgagee is then entitled to prove for the balance of his debt and to receive dividends rateably with other creditors. (Cf. Rules 73, 74, 75 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 and 1890).

We think, therefore, that the principle adopted by the Judge was a correct one, though it was not correctly applied, for he appears to have withdrawn from the fund available to the mortgagees the sum of Rs. 1,484 odd.—the amount due under their decree to the attaching creditors, Baldeo Das and Basant Lal. The only other point urged is that the attaching creditors should have been allowed to realise their debts in full from the property they attached before the other creditors got anything. We have already expressed the opinion that such a contention cannot be maintained.

We are informed that a distribution of assets has already been made in accordance with the schedule. The appellants had applied for stay of distribution but the application was rejected on the 21st June 1911, as it was not pressed.

We do not, therefore, propose to disturb now the proceedings of the Court below. We have indicated the mistakes in procedure which were committed and have pointed out the manner in which the claims of secured creditors are to be dealt with. It is for the Courts below to see that secured creditors comply strictly with the procedure laid down in section 31 and to bear in mind that under the provisions of section 16 of the Act, the rights of secured creditors are not affected in any way by the passing of an order of adjudication. With these observations, we dismiss both the appeals. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A District Judge heard an appeal and remitted certain issues to the Court of first instance. Before that Court returned its findings, the District Judge transferred the case from his own file to that of the Subordinate Judge who, after considering the findings of the first Court, decided the case:

Held, that the District Judge was not competent to transfer the case to the Subordinate Judge for disposal.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, dated 14th August 1911.

Mr. Jung Bahadur Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I regret that I am obliged to set aside the decree of the Court below, and remand the case as the suit was brought so far back as the 29th of February 1904. It was one for possession of land on the ground that it belonged to the plaintiffs and appertained to their village. The Court of first instance, the Munsif of Bansgaon, dismissed the suit on the 30th of August, 1904. An appeal was preferred by the defendants to the District Judge of Gorakhpur. It was heard by him and issues were referred by him to the Court below on the 13th of March 1907. The Munsif recorded findings on the issues on the 21st of March 1907. The learned Judge considered the findings to be insufficient and referred back the issues on the 4th of June 1907. Meanwhile, some of the parties died. The Munsif thereupon sent back the case to the District Judge in order that the legal representatives of the deceased might be brought on the record. On receipt of the record and before findings upon the issues referred to the Court below had been returned, the learned Judge, by his order of the 16th of August 1907, transferred the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. That Court, after considering the finding of the Court of first instance on the issues referred by the District Judge, decided the appeal on the 14th of August 1911.

From the decision of the Subordinate Judge, this appeal has been prefererd and the first contention raised is that the order made by the District Judge for the transfer of the case which had been heard by him in part, was improper and without jurisdiction and that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was consequently without jurisdiction also and must be set aside. This contention is supported by the ruling of this Court in Udit Narain Singh v. Jhanda (1). That was a case very similar to the present. In that case, as in this, the District Judge had made an order referring issues under section 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. Before the return was made by the Court of first instance, the District Judge transferred the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It was held that the Appellate Court was not competent to transfer the appeal for disposal by another Court and was bound to decide the case itself. Reference was made to the last paragraph of section 566 and the first paragraph to section 567 of the old Code, which have been re-enacted in the new Code of Civil Procedure in Order XLI, rules 25 and 26. I am bound to follow this ruling which is also consonant with the decision of the Madras High Court in Kumarasami Reddiar v. Subbaraya Reddiar (2). I accordingly set aside the order of transfer to the Subordinate Judge and the decree of the Subordinate Judge on appeal and direct the District Judge to restore the appeal to the file of pending appeals in his own Court and to dispose of it according to law. Costs here and heretofore will abide the result. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for rent. The controversy between the parties relates to the rate of rent annually payable. This question, the plaintiff-appellant contends, is res judicata by reason of the decision in a prior suit between the parties. The defendants-respondents urge on the other hand that the question is res judicata by reason of the decree of the Settlement Officer in a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The District Judge has held that the decision of the Settlement Officer does not operate as res judicata, whereas the decision in the previous suit for rent is conclusive between the parties. Two questions, therefore, require consideration in this appeal, namely first, what is the effect of the decree of the Settlement Officer, and, secondly, what is the effect of the decision in the rent suit.

The previous suit for rent was instituted in the year 1900 for recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1897 to 1900. The original Court decided in favour of the landlord on the 22nd September 1900. Upon appeal preferred by the defendants, the Appellate Court, on the 28th February 1901, decided against the landlord. On the 14th March 1904, that decision was affirmed by this Court. Meanwhile, during the pendency of the appeal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the tenant had instituted a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, before the Revenue Authorities. In this suit no evidence was produced on either side. The Settlement Officer accordingly, on the 9th November 1900, dismissed the suit, holding that the only material he had before him was the decision of the first Court in the rent suit against which no evidence had been adduced. Now, it may be conceded, that as provided under section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the decision of the Settlement Officer operates as a decree. But the question still remains, what was actually decided by him. The dismissal of the suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for default may bar a second suit of the same scope and character, but clearly it does not operate as res judicata. Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (1). It is plain that there was no adjudication that the rent was as alleged by the tenant or by the landlord; obviously, therefore, that decree does not bar the determination of the question now in controversy. We may add that the learned Vakil for the appellant placed reliance upon the case of Jogendra Nath Roy v. Krishna Promoda Dassi (2) to show that a suit in the Civil Court for alteration and correction of entries made in the Record-of-Rights published under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is not maintainable. That decision is clearly of no assistance to him and it is worthy of note that the decision in question has not been followed in this Court. Golab Misser v. Kumar Kalanand Singh (3); Pandab Dowari v. Anand Kishun (4).

As regards the effect of the decision in the suit for rent, the answer must depend upon the scope of the question raised in that suit and the adjudication by the Court. Now, it is clear that the question in controversy then was, not the amount of rent payable for the particular years for which rent had been claimed, but the amount of jama annually payable by the tenant to the landlord. This question was decided in favour of the landlord by the Court of first instance, but the Appellate Court decided against him. The Appellate Court expressly found that the plaintiff had failed to prove his allegation while the tenants defendants had established by affirmative evidence that the jamas were as stated by them. Consequently, there was an express adjudication by the Court upon the question now in controversy. In view, therefore, of the decisions of this Court in the cases of Rajendra Nath Ghose v. Tarangini Dasi (5) Hara Chandra Bairagi v. Bepin Behari Das (6) and Panchu Mandal v. Chandra Kant Shaha (7), the decision in the previous suit for rent must be deemed conclusive.

On behalf of the appellant, reliance has finally been placed upon the cases of Kali Roy v. Pratap Narain (8) and Sri Narain Singh v. Sundarbati Kumari (9), where the principle was laid down that, where there is conflict between the decision in a suit for rent and an entry in the Settlement Record, the Court must decide upon the conflicting evidence in the case. This principle, in our opinion, applies only when the decision in the suit for rent does not operate as res judicata. In such a contingency, the entry in the Settlement Record furnishes presumptive evidence and the question arises whether that evidence is rebutted by the decree in the suit for rent. But the case before us is not one of the type of Nekejnie v. Nanda Dulal (10), where it was pointed out that there is no adjudication as to the rate of rent if, upon the failure of the plaintiff to establish his case, the Court makes a decree in his favour on the admission of the defendant, not because the defendant has established his case to be true but because the plaintiff, having failed to prove his case, has become entitled to obtain a decree according to the admission of the defendant. In the case before us, there was a clear decision upon the question of the annual rent based upon the evidence adduced by the parties.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other two Appeals Nos. 217 and 218 of 1910 which are, therefore, also dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Pre-emption—Title of the plaintiff at date of sale and at date when decree ought to have been passed—Partition after the decree of first Court, effect of.

A plaintiff having a right to a decree in a pre-emption suit at the date of the sale and at the date upon which the decree ought to have been made by the first Court, does not lose that right because of a partition, which comes into force before the decree becomes final on appeal.

Rohan Singh v. Bhau Lal, 6 A. L. J. 699; 3 Ind. Cas. 42; 31 A. 530 relied upon.

Tafazzul Husain v. Than Singh, 32 A. 567; 7 A. L. J. 715; 6 Ind. Cas 426, Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal, 21 A. 441, explained and distinguished.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 24th of May 1911.

Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Appellant.

Mr. Govind Prashad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that he was a co-sharer in the same khata as the vendor while the vendees were more distant co-sharers. He then alleged that, according to the custom of pre-emption prevailing in the village, a "near" co-sharer had a preferential right over a more distant co-sharer. It is quite clear that the plaintiff was alleging nearness in space as distinguished from nearness of relationship. The Court of first instance originally found that the custom of pre-emption was not proved and that the wajib-ul-arz was an entry of a contract and not of a custom and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court held that the custom of pre-emption was proved. We think that this ought to be taken as a finding that the particular custom alleged by the plaintiff in fact existed. When the case came before the Court of first instance a second time on remand, it erroneously went into the question of the custom a second time. It framed an issue as to whether a custom prevailed. It then went on to find the issue in favour of the plaintiff upon the ground that this very matter had been decided by the lower Appellate Court. The Court then went into the question whether or not the plaintiff had a preferential right over the defendants-vendees, that is to say, the meaning of the reference to nearness and found in favour of the plaintiff. We think that it ought never to have gone into this matter having regard to the finding of the lower Appellate Court. All that it had to do was to find whether or not the plaintiff was, as he alleged, a co-sharer in the same khata as the vendor. However, we do not think that any injustice was done because the claim was decreed and we think that the Court was quite justified in finding on the evidence that the custom as set forth in the wajib-ul-arz gave a preferential right to a co-sharer who was nearer in space,

The defendants again appealed. The lower Appellate Court decided in favour of the defendants but not upon the ground of the non-existence of the custom.

It appears that before the sale which gave rise to the present claim, partition proceedings had commenced. Before the order of remand and after the first decision of the Munsif, the partition came into force with the result that the plaintiff ceased to be a co-sharer in the same khata with the vendor. If this had been the position of things at the date of the sale, the plaintiff would have no right against the defendant vendee. The vendor, vendee and pre-emptor would all have been sharers in different khatas. It was successfully urged before the lower Appellate Court that inasmuch as the plaintiff no longer fulfilled the condition of being a co-sharer in the same khata as the vendor, a decree could not be made in his favour. It would appear that the defendants never raised this point relating to the partition proceedings when the case came before the lower Appellate Court the first time. It was mentioned for the first time apparently when the case came before the Munsif on remand.

The real question that we have to decide is, whether or not the plaintiff, having a right to a decree in pre-emption at the date of the sale and at the date upon which such decree ought to have been made by the Munsif, loses that right because of a partition which comes into force before the time the decree becomes final on appeal. No direct authority has been cited to us in support of such contention. The respondent cited the case of Tufazzul Husain v. Than Singh (1). That case was decided entirely upon the principles of Muhammadan Law. Furthermore, the partition had actually come into effect prior to the date of the decree. In the case of Rohan Singh v. Bhau Lal (2), very much the same question arose. Then the vendee became a co-sharer long after the decree of the first two Courts and it was urged on his behalf that because the plaintiff at the date of the final decree could not show that he had a preferential right, the suit should be dismissed. The authorities are referred to at some length and the Court was of opinion that the plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption does not lose his right if he can show that at the date of the institution of the suit and at the date upon which the decree ought to have been made he had a right to pre-emption. At page 702 of the judgment, the following passage occurs:—"We think that it would be contrary to all justice to hold that because the Court of first instance and the Court of first appeal made an erroneous decision, the plaintiff should be denied a decree which, it must be admitted, for the purposes of this appeal, he was entitled to". In the present case on the 6th of April 1910, the date of the first Court's first decision, the plaintiff was, (it must now be admitted), entitled to a decree. The partition did not come into force until the 1st of July 1910. The lower Court refers to the case of Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (3). That case is clearly distinguishable from the present. There the partition proceedings were completed before the Court of first instance came to make its decree.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts. We extend the time for payment of the money to three months from this date.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

The facts connected with this appeal are set forth in detail in our judgment in Bhamphul Devi v. Harbakhsh Singh (1). For the purposes of the present appeal, we need say no more than that Bakhtawar Singh, the father of appellants, was heavily involved in debt at the time when he thought fit to execute a deed of gift of the whole of his property in favour of his two minor sons, Jagdip Singh and Jagindar Singh. This deed of gift was executed on the 6th August 1907, and for reasons given in our judgment in the case above referred to, we are satisfied that the so-called gift was a fictitious transaction, the object of which was to defraud Bawa Gurbakhsh Singh, who was at the time endeavouring to execute a decree which he held against Bakhtawar Singh. In April 1908, the decree-holder attached the property of his judgment-debtor, Bakhtwar Singh, whereupon the latter's minor sons objected to the attachment on the ground that the said property belonged to them in virtue of the said deed of gift. Before these objections were heard, Bakhtawar Singh died and his sons were, in due course, brought on to the record of the execution proceedings as his representatives. Their objections were accordingly heard and determined under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, with the result that the objections were dismissed and the attachment of the property was maintained. From this order, the objectors have appealed to this Court, and in support of their contentions, they rely—(1) upon the gift in their favour, and (2) upon the fact that the property has now devolved upon them and that it cannot after such devolution be made liable for the debts of their father.

As regards the first contention, we have no hesitation in holding, for reasons given in our judgment in the connected case, that the gift was a mere sham and that Bakhtawar Singh did not cease to be owner of the property after the execution of the deed of gift. If, therefore, appellant's case rested merely upon that gift, we would have decided against them.

But the second contention is supported by the authority of two cases reported as Hansraj v. Sochet Singh (2) and Kartar Singh v. Munshi Ram (3). In these cases, it was held that ancestral land and houses belonging to an ordinary agriculturist, once they have come into the hands of the heir of the debtor, and the latter had not in his life-time actually charged them with the debt, are not assets of the debtor's estate which the heir is bound duly to apply and to account for.

For the purpose of this case, both parties are agreed that the property in question was ancestral and that the question at issue must be decided in accordance with the ordinary rules of Customary Law. In these circumstances, the rulings above referred to are directly in point and, if they are to be followed, the objectors must succeed in this appeal.

But, with every deference, we have some doubt as to the correctness of these rulings, as the principle therein enunciated appears to us to be novel and opposed to the idea, heretofore somewhat widely prevalent, that agricultural tribes in this Province recognise the just debts of the last male holder as an enforceable charge upon the property derived from him, whether such property be ancestral or acquired. The question is one of great importance and the decision of it must necessarily have far-reaching effects.

We, therefore, refer it to a Full Bench for final determination.

The question is this:—If a male proprietor, governed by customary rules, contracts a just debt and dies leaving ancestral landed property, is such property liable, in the hands of the next holder, in respect of such debt?

DECISION OF THE FULL BENCH.

RATTIGAN, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is abstract and has no reference to the facts of any particular case. It is as follows:—

"If a male proprietor, governed by customary rules, contracts a just debt and dies leaving ancestral landed property, is such property liable in the hands of the next holder in respect of such debt?"

Though not actually stated in so many words, the debt is clearly assumed, in the order of reference, to be one which has not been made an express charge on the ancestral landed property by the debtor. It is, in other words, a personal debt, and for its liquidation the person who incurred it has made no express provision by sale or mortgage of the ancestral estate for the time being in his possession. In these circumstances, can the creditor by obtaining a simple money decree either against the debtor himself in the life-time or after his death against the persons, who are the legal representatives pro tanto of the deceased debtor, execute his decree, after the death of the debtor, by attachment of the landed ancestral property which was at one time in the possession of the deceased? It may, perhaps, be conceded that such attachment is permissible during the life-time of the debtor, but with that aspect of the question, we are not at present concerned. The point before us is whether, in such circumstances, the creditor can, after the death of the debtor, proceed to execute his money-decree against ancestral land in the hands of a person who has obtained possession of it in due course under the rules of Customary Law. In our opinion, the answer to the question must be in the negative.

The decisions of the Full Benches of this Court reported as Gujar v. Sham Das (4); Harvans Singh v. Harnam Singh (5); Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State (6) and Sundar v. Salig Ram (7), all proceed upon the principle that the person for the time being in possession of ancestral landed property is not a full owner, and that he is "not regarded as having the whole and sole interest in the property and power to dispose of it, so as to defeat the expectations of those who are deemed to have a residuary interest and who would take the property if the owner died without disposing of it" [Plowden, S. J., in Gujar v. Sham Das (4)]. The right of the reversionary heirs under Customary Law, is, as stated by Clark, C. J., in Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State (6), "a right in property, the enjoyment of which is deferred" and it is vested in interest in the sense that the person in whom it inheres has a present fixed right to its future enjoyment. As the learned Chief Judge further remarked, "in this respect, the reversionary heir of the Customary Law bears a resemblance to the tenant in tail, such reversioner not inheriting from the last owner but from the common ancestor."

Logically, no doubt, it should not be in the power of a person, who is for the time being in possession of ancestral landed estate, to charge that estate beyond the period of his own life, and certainly not by any act on his part prejudicially to affect the rights of the reversionary heirs to succeed to it. But, as has been often remarked, custom is not always logical. A well defined exception to the general principle has been recognized by custom in favour of the power of the present holder of the estate to alienate it, by sale or mortgage, for purposes which such custom recognizes as necessary and binding on the person who would in the ordinary way take the estate upon the death of the alienor. This is in itself an exceptional power conferred upon the holder of the estate, and this exceptional power is strictly circumscribed. The holder is competent to alienate the estate for necessary purposes but, beyond this, custom does not go; and we know of no cases where ancestral landed property, upon which the last holder has created no charge, has been held liable in respect of his debts, just or otherwise, after it has passed into the hands of his reversionary heirs.

Mr. Sukh Dial relies upon certain observations made by Plowden, S. J., in the course of his judgment in Atma Ram v. Nauranga (8) to the effect that the entire interest of a proprietor, whether sonless or not, is liable, without any special act upon his part creating a charge, for his just debts, not only while in his own hands but also in the hands of his heirs. But these observations were obiter and were not necessary for the decision of the case before the Court, and, with every deference to one whose knowledge of Punjab Customary Law was exceptionally profound, we cannot assent to a proposition which, so far as we know, has never been recognized in any direct decision of this Court; and would, if accepted, very materially extend the scope of a rule which is itself of a peculiarly exceptional character.

For the reasons given, we are of opinion that the answer to the abstract question put to us must be in the negative and with this expression of opinion, we direct that the record be returned to the Division Bench for disposal of the appeal before it.

Res judicata—Decision in rent suit by defaulting patnidar—Subsequent rent suit by purchaser of patni under Patni Regulation—Whether former decision res judicata in later suit—Patni Regulation Act (VIII of 1819), s. 11—Action in ejectment by purchaser at patni sale—Limitation—Incumbrance—Adverse possession, when incumbrance.

Although the position of a purchaser at a patni sale may not be precisely that of a purchaser at a revenue sale (Moizuddi v. Ishan Chandra, 7 Ind.Cas. 849; 13 C. L. J. 293;15 C. W.N. 706), yet he is not privy in estate to the defaulting proprietor and does not derive his title from him, as, under section 11 of the Patni Regulation, he acquires property free of all encumbrances that might have been created upon it by the act of the defaulter, his representatives or assignees.

Tara Prosad Mitter v. Ram Nursingh Mitter, 5 B. L. R. A. p. 5; 14 W. R. 283 and Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukerjee, 12 C. 82 at p. 90, relied upon.

Therefore, a suit for rent by the purchaser cannot be barred as res judicata, because a previous suit for rent by the defaulter failed on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the then plaintiff and the defendant was not established.

If an action in ejectment is brought by the purchaser, limitation will run against him only from the date when his purchase became final.

Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Rajendra Lal Goswami, 25 C. 167, followed.

The interest of a person in adverse possession is an incumbrance only when the adverse possession has continued for the statutory period.

Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen, 11 Ind. Cas. 453; 14 C. L. J. 136, relied upon.

Therefore, where the defaulting patnidar was not dispossessed for ten years before the patni sale, the trespasser's title by adverse possession had not been perfected, and, consequently there was no incumbrance to be annulled by the purchaser.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Birbhum, dated December 14th, 1908, modifying that of the Munsif of Suri, dated June 12th, 1908.

Babu Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Appellants.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen, and Sachhidananda Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants in a suit for rent. The dispute is limited to a six-annas share of the property which the plaintiff claims to have purchased on the 15th May 1905 at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819. The defence is substantially two-fold, namely, first, that the claim is barred by res judicata, as a suit by a previous patnidar in 1895 failed on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the then plaintiff and the defendants was not established; and secondly, that the claim is barred by limitation.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, it is entirely untenable. The plaintiff is a purchaser at a sale under Regulation VIII of 1819. Consequently, although his position may not be precisely that of a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue [Moizuddi Biswas v. Ishan Chandra (1)], yet he is not privy in estate to the defaulting proprietor and he does not derive his title from him, as, under tection 11 of the Regulation, he has acquired he property free of all encumbrances that might have been created upon it by the act of the defaulter, his representatives or assignees. This is clear from the cases of Tara Prasad Mitter v. Ram Nursingh Mitter (2) and Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji (3). The first contention, therefore, fails.

In so far as the second contention is concerned, it is equally groundless. It is argued, not that the claim for rent is barred by limitation, but that the title to recover rent has been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the defendants. Now, as already stated, the plaintiff purchased the property on the 15th May 1905 and the case of Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhry v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (4) shows that if an action in ejectment were brought, limitation would be taken to run against the plaintiff only from the date when his purchase became final. There is, therefore, no substance in the second contention.

It has been finally suggested, somewhat faintly, that the plaintiffs are bound to show by overt act that they have elected to extinguish the interest of the defendants. But it is clear, upon the authority of the cases of Modhoo Soodun Koondoo v. Ramdhan Gangolee (5) and Titu Bibi v. Mohesh Chunder Bagchi (6), that the plaintiff need not take any steps, before the suit is brought, to annul the encumbrance. As a matter of fact, however, it is an entirely unfounded assumption that there is any encumbrance at all to annul in the present instance. The case of Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (7) shows that the interest of an adverse possessor is an encumbrance only when the adverse possession has continued for the statutory period. Here, the adverse possession of the defendant was asserted by the sale of the patni on the 15th May 1905. The defendants had been in adverse possession, even if it be assumed that there was adverse possession on their part, for ten years, when the interest of the patnidar was sold out under the Regulation. Their title as adverse possession had not, therefore been perfected, when the plaintiffs as purchasers became entitled to the property and so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, no title has been acquired against them since their purchase.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other appeal (Second Appeal No. 770 of 1909) which is, therefore, also dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 15—Insolvency, petition for—Dismissal—Ground to be indicated in judgment—Adjudication—Equitable distribution of assets—Advantage to creditors.

An adjudication of insolvency ensures the distribution of the assets, if there are any, according to the equitable arrangement for which provision is made in the Insolvency Act.

Therefore, if there are considerable assets, it would be most disadvantageous to the general body of creditors that there should not be an adjudication.

A Judge, in dismissing a petition for adjudication, should indicate one of the grounds set forth in section 15 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as that on which he purports to act.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge of Hooghly, dated April 25th, 1910, dismissing the application of the petitioner to be adjudged of insolvent.

Babu Gopal Chandra Ghoshal, for the Appellant.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion, the order of dismissal of the insolvent's petition for adjudication must be reversed. The power to dismiss is under section 15 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and the Judge in his judgment does not indicate any of the grounds there set forth as that on which he purports to act, nor is it made to appear before us that there was any ground on which we can properly uphold the judgment. In fact, if, as the creditor maintains, there are considerable assets, it would be most disadvantageous to the general body of creditors that there should not be an adjudication. The adjudication ensures the distribution of the assets, if there are any, according to the equitable arrangement for which provision is made in the Act.

We must, therefore, allow this appeal and make an order of adjudication.

The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal, hearing fee one gold mohur.

The case will now be remitted to the lower Court and the proceedings in insolvency will be continued as contemplated by the Act.

Appeal allowed: case remitted.

Grant—Construction of deed—Whether grant of land or of land revenue only—Resumption by Government—Claim for declaration as to invalidity of resumption—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.

A grant by a Mahratta Raja was in the following terms:—"Total of 60 velies of land, including wet and dry lands, water, trees, stones, sidha, sadhya (whatever is and may be brought into existence), present and future patti; all banb and all kana with all Samudavams with water poured from the hand. * * * * * * * *"

Held, (1) that this was a grant only of the land revenue, and

(2) that a suit for a declaration that the resumption of same by Government was illegal was barred by section 4 of the Pensions Act.

Government may grant the kudivaram to one person and the melvaram to another; similarly, though both the kudivaram and melvaram may be combined in the hands of the Government, there is nothing to prevent it from treating them as distinct interests and granting them to the same person.

Land revenue is not a servitude attaching to the land. The kudivaram and melvaram are distinct interests constituting the totality of ownership in the land. The revenue is not a servitude on property which belongs to the kudivaram holder.

Section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871 does not require that the grant should be of the land revenue alone in order to shut out the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit relating to a grant of land revenue.

Even where land revenue is granted along with the land itself, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to determine a suit which relates to the land revenue alone.

Freedom from liability to land revenue is not identical with holding a grant of land revenue. The land revenue arising from a man's own holding, when it is remitted and the land pays nothing, is rather extinguished than granted.

Babaji v. Rajaram, 1 B. 75 at p. 81, referred to.

The Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) contemplates money payments to be received through the Collector or recovered from persons bound to pay revenue.

Quære:—Whether, when there is a grant of the land revenue only to a person already owning the kudivaram right, there is anything in section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871, construed in the light of Regulation IV of 1832 and Act IV of 1862, to take away the jurisdiction of a Civil Court with respect to a claim to the kudivaram right?

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram in O. S. No. 15 of 1907.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was preferred against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram in a suit instituted by a Ranee of His Highness the late Rajah Sivaji of Tanjore against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that certain lands were absolute freehold Inam and not liable to resumption by the Government and for recovery of assessment paid by her under protest for faslies 1312-1315. The lands in question, along with some other lands, aggregating in all 26 velies, are situated in the village of Kottaiyoor in the Kumbakonam taluq. The whole village was granted in Inam by Maharaja Tuljaji of Tanjore in the year 1763 to 24 Brahmins by a grant under the Royal seal (sicca grant), which is marked as Exhibit L in the case. The lands in dispute in this suit were alienated by the descendants of the grantees at various times. Some portions of them came into the possession of the late Maharaja Sivaji in 1846 and others into the possession of the plaintiff's co-Ranees and the plaintiff subsequently on various occasions, by purchases made for the benefit of a temple of which the plaintiff is the present trustee. The Government resumed the Inam in June 1905 and collected assessment on the lands from the year fasli 1312, the notification for resumption having been published in January 1903. The plaintiff's case is that Government had no right to resume the Inam as the lands were granted as absolute freehold to the donees under Exhibit L. The plaint also alleged that no proper inquiry was held before the resumption and the order of resumption is, therefore, illegal. The defendant contended that the order of resumption was passed in conformity with the law of the country and orders of Government, that the grant itself was invalid and that the title under the grant ceased on the alienation of the lands by the original Inamdars. He also contended that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to question the legality of the order of resumption. The Subordinate Judge held that the right under the grant was forfeited both by the failure of the holders to bring the lands to settlement under the Inam rules and by the alienations made by the Inamdars. He also upheld the defendant's contention that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to question the validity of the resumption. We are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court on the question of jurisdiction is right and it is, therefore, unnecessary to go into the questions whether the grantees under Exhibit L were entitled to alienate the Inam and whether the order of resumption was legal.

The question whether the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred rests on the construction of section 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), which enacts: "Except as hereinafter provided, no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for any such pension or grant and whatever may have been the nature of the payment claimed or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted." Section 6 provides that on a certificate from a Collector, Deputy Commissioner or other officer authorised in that behalf, a Civil Court can take cognisance of such claim. The question for decision is, whether the suit is one relating to a grant of land revenue made by the Mahratta Government of Tanjore in the year 1768. Exhibit L is in the form of a letter addressed to "M. Anam Karkoons (clerks) present and future, Subha Mannargudi." After describing the lands granted, the terms of the grant are thus set out:—"Total of 60 velies of land including wet and dry lands, water, trees, stones, nidhi, niksheha (treasure), sidha, sadhya (whatever is and may be brought into existence) present and future patti all banb and all kana with all samudavams with water poured from the hand.

"Boundaries to be fixed and the land made dumala.

"The gift is to be continued puthra pouthra paramparya (i.e., from son to grandson in succession). Fresh orders from year to year are not required." It is contended for the appellants that the grant is of the land itself with everything contained in it and not of the Government assessment or melvaram. For the Government, it is contended that the language of the document does not necessarily show that the gift was of anything more than melvaram, or Government assessment, and that, at any rate, the document expressly makes a grant of land revenue. There is no evidence on record to show whether the kudivaram right in the lands was vested in the Tanjore Government at the time of the grant or not. But the language is appropriate to a grant of kudivaram right also. We shall assume, for the purposes of this judgment that the kudivaram right in the lands was vested in the Tanjore Government and passed to the grantees under Exhibit L. But taking this to be so, is Exhibit L a grant of the melvaram or Government assessment or not? We are prepared to assume, without deciding, that a grant of all rights in certain lands vested in the Government, without reserving any right to Government revenue, would not by itself amount to a grant of the land, not being liable to revenue in the hands of Government; a mere grant of the land should not be construed to mean a grant of what did not exist at the time, namely, the Government assessment on it. But it cannot be disputed that Government may grant the kudivaram to one person and melvaram to another; similarly although both the kudivaram and the melvaram may be combined in the hands of the Government, there is nothing to prevent it from treating them as distinct interests and granting them to the same person. Now, what is the fair construction of the words in Exhibit L. It is not disputed that the words "patti" means Government assessment and that the words "banb" and "kana" also mean certain cesses leviable by Government. According to the terms of Exhibit L, the patti, "banb", and "kana" are given to the grantees. The gift is not of the land only, as Sarvamaniyam, though such gift may have the effect of exempting the grantee from the payment of any revenue. The items of Government revenue are expressly stated to be granted as well as the land itself. There was nothing to prevent the Tanjore Rajah from granting the kudivaram and the melvaram rights to the same grantee severally though he might also merely grant the land itself with all rights as Sarvamanyam. It is argued that the Government revenue and the cesses are referred to merely to show that the gift was to be free of liability to revenue and to express more fully the idea that the land was granted absolutely with all rights.

But, although the same legal effect might be achieved in either of two ways, the question is what was the method adopted in the particular case? The water, trees and stones might refer to rights included in the kudivaram. It is unnecessary to consider whether mines and treasures would form part of the kudivaram or melvaram right or of both. There is anyhow a distinct enumeration of Government assessment and cesses as subjects of grant. We must, therefore, hold that there was a grant of land revenue in Exhibit L. This being the case, we are of opinion that the suit relates to a grant of land revenue.

Section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871 does not require that the grant should be of land revenue alone in order to shut out the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit relating to a grant of land revenue. Such a construction would be opposed to the plain language of the section. No authority has been cited which goes to the extent of holding that, where land revenue is separately granted (along with the land itself) from the kudivaram right therein, a Civil Court would have jurisdiction to determine a suit which relates to the land revenue alone. In the present case, the Government, by its order of resumption, merely resumed the land revenue; and levied full assessment on the land and the suit is for a declaration that the resumption by the Government of the land revenue was illegal. In Rama v. Subba (1), it was held that a suit for the moiety of two villages granted as jagir was unsustainable in the Civil Court without a certificate from the Collector against the rival claimant who set up an exclusive right to the whole jagir. It does not appear that anything more than the melvaram was granted by the Government as jagir, and prima facie the grant would not include kudivaram right. The suit, therefore, apparently related only to the melvaram right and was clearly barred by section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871. The decision, however, proceeded on a wider ground. The learned Judges, Collins, C. J., and Muttuswami Aiyar, J, were apparently of opinion that, even though the inam might consist only of the land revenue, if it was granted to one in whom the kudivaram right was also vested and if a dispute arose between rival claimants of both the kudivaram and melvaram right, a suit relating to such would not be maintainable in the Civil Court even with respect to the kudivaram right. The view adopted by them was that unless the inam had been enfranchised and made the free-hold property of the inamdar, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was shut out formerly by the provisions of Regulation IV of 1831 and afterwards by Act XXI of 1871. Regulation IV of 1831 in terms excluded the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts only with respect to grants of land revenue. Act IV of 1862 rescinded the provisions of Regulation IV of 1831 in cases in which the inam was enfranchised.

It is unnecessary to consider whether, when there is grant of the land revenue only to a person already owning the kudivaram right, there is anything in section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871, construed in the light of Regulation IV of 1831, and Act IV of 1862, to take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court with respect to a claim to the kudivaram right. Reference is made by the learned Judges to the judgment of Holloway and Kindersley, JJ., in Peria Kovil Kalavi Appan v. A. Pulliah Chetty (2). The suit in that case was for the recovery of certain lands which the plaintiff alleged he had purchased from an inamdar. It does not appear whether the inam in that case consisted of the melvaram right only or of the land itself. The judgment apparently proceeded on the footing that it was the melvaram but that the kudivaram already belonged to the grantee at the time of the grant. It was argued that the release, by the Government in favour of the owner of the kudivaram, of the right to the revenue could not be taken to amount to a grant of the land revenue. The learned Judges say:— "It appears, therefore, to us that the receipt from a tenant of revenue less than that assessable upon land of the same quality is a gift or grant of the difference." The dismissal of the suit by the District Court was upheld in second appeal. This judgment also apparently assumed that a suit relating to the kudivaram would also be unsustainable if it vested in the same person as the inam grant of melvaram. On the other hand in Panchanadayyan v. Nilakandayyan (3), where the suit was for partition of certain lands, and it was found that the inam grant was of the lands themselves revenue free and not merely of the revenue, it was held that the suit was maintainable. Turner, C. J., says:— "We are of opinion that the nature of the grants is such that they do not come within the provisions of the Pensions Act. That Act contemplates money payments to be received through the Collector or recovered from persons bound to pay revenue." It does not appear that the grant contained a distinct gift to the grantee of the Government revenue of the land as Exhibit L does in this case. The case is only authority for the position that, where there is no gift of the land revenue as such, the case does not come within the purview of section 4 of the Pensions Act. In Kumara Tirumalai Naik v. Bangaru Tirumalai Sauri Naik(4), the suit was, inter alia, to remove the defendants from the management of certain inam lands and to appoint other managers. The grant was not made by the Sovereign power but was confirmed by the British Government. The Court held, in accordance with the view taken in Panchanadayyan v. Nilakandayyan (3), that assuming that the confirmation by the Government of the previous grant amounted to a re-grant, it could not be said that the giving of the land free of revenue was a grant of land revenue so as to bring the case within the provisions of the Pensions Act." Freedom from liability to land revenue is not identical with holding a grant of land revenue, any more than the extinction of an easement by becoming sole proprietor of the property servient as well as dominant, is a grant of an easement. The land revenue arising from a man's own holding, when it is remitted and the land pays nothing, is rather extinguished than granted. See Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (5). It may be that if the land itself is granted without any distinct grant of the revenue thereon, the case would not come within section 4. But the observation that the relinquishment of the revenue due on land previously subject to it is not tantamount to the grant of the revenue is more questionable and is opposed to the decision of this Court in Peria Kovil Kalavi Appan v. A. Pulliah Chetty (2). Land revenue is not a servitude attaching to the land. The kudivaram and melvaram are distinct interests constituting the totality of ownership in the land. The revenue is not a servitude on property which belongs to the kudivaram holder. The case is, however, not similar to the present one as there was apparently no distinct grant of land revenue in that case whether Panchanadayyan v. Nilakandayyan (3) and Kumara Tirumalai Naik v. Rangam Tirumalai Sauri Naik (4), are reconcilable with Rama v. Subba (1) or not they do not for the reason already mentioned affect the decision to be come to in the present case. Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (5), and Ravji Narayan Mandlik v. Dadaji Bapuji Desai (6) were similar to Panchanadayyan v. Nilakandayyan (3), and Kumara Tirumalai Naik v. Rangam Tirumalai Sauri Naik (4) and decided merely that where the grant is of the land itself section 4 of the Pensions Act does not apply. Our attention was drawn to the fact that in the latter case, in a letter accompanying the sanad and written to the Desathikaris and Deshlekhakes, the present and future patti (taxes) was said to be granted to the inamdar as in Exhibit L, in this case. But the sanad itself did not mention the pattis. See page 524. And it was contended by the defendant in that case that there was a distinct grant of the revenue of the land. Ganpat Rao v. Anand Rao (7) was also similar to Panchanadayyan v. Nilakandayyan (3). So also was Ganpat Rao v. Anant Rao (8). In the latter case, the Privy Council did not definitely, decide the point, although their Lordships' observations might show that, if the grant was of the land itself and not of the revenue, section 4 of the Pensions Act would not be applicable. In Mannu Lal v. Fazal Imam (9), also, apparently the grant was of the land itself. The learned Judges, Richards, C. J., and Bannerjee, J., were apparently of opinion that section 4 would apply only where the land revenue is payable by the Government to the grantee. They refer to section 3 which states that land revenue includes anything payable on the part of the Government in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite or office. The object of the definition was merely to include payment to be made by the Government and not to confine the expression "grant of money" to such payments. We are unable to accept this restricted interpretation of section 4. The decision of the case, however, is rested on the authority of Ganpat Rai v. Anand Rao (7), and proceeded, therefore, on the ground that the grant was of the land itself and not of the revenue thereon. In Gunnaiyan v Kamakchi Ayyar (10), Bashyam Iyengar, J., observed (page 345) that "claims in respect of personal inams, which have not been enfranchised, are exempt from the cognizance of Civil Courts and may be adjudicated upon only by the Governor in Council or other executive authority." The respondent contends that the learned Judge adopted the view taken in the case in Rama v. Subba (1). Whether it was the intention of the Legislature to shut out from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts all claims relating to the kudivaram right also, where both the kudivaram and the melwaram are granted by the Government to the same person, and whether such intention has been effectively carried out in section 4 of the Pensions Act, it is not necessary for us to decide in this case. As we read Exhibit L, there was a distinct grant of the land revenue, apart from a grant of the kudivaram right. The suit, therefore, relates to a grant of land revenue, and it relates only to the land revenue. We are, therefore, of opinion that the suit is barred by section 4 of the Pensions Act. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal No. 188 of 1908 follows, and is dismissed with costs.

Stay of execution—Sufficient cause—Substantial injury—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 5.

In an appeal from a decree in a suit for a declaration that certain property is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, the Appellate Court can and should stay execution of that decree inasmuch as otherwise it would be difficult for the claimant to recover the property in the event of his succeeding in the appeal.

Sardarni Bhagwan Kaur v. Rani Harnam Kaur, 82 P. R. 1910; 122 P. W. R. 1910; 149 P. L. R. 1910; 7 Ind. Cas. 1017, referred to.

In such a case, the property should remain under attachment pending decision of the appeal.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This matter arises out of a suit in which Sewa Ram and Ram Chand got a decree dated 10th March 1908, for Rs. 3,200, with lien on certain property mortgaged, against Durga Pershad. In execution, property was attached. Radha Balab Singh, son of Durga Parshad, brought an objection which was dismissed, and then brought a regular suit which also failed, his claim being dismissed with costs. An appeal lodged by Radha Balab Singh is now pending in this Court.

In my order of 17th January 1912, which was an interim order for stay of execution, I have not clearly stated whether the decree of 10th March 1908, or the later decree is the one of which execution is to be stayed. But the later decree is one which can only be executed for costs, and the application for stay of execution speaks of giving security for the decretal amount and costs.

If the property which Radha Balab Singh is suing for is sold and passes into other hands, it will be difficult for him to recover it even if he succeeds in his appeal to this Court. I certainly think execution should be stayed in such a case, and I have no doubt that I have power to order stay of execution of the decree, dated 10th March 1908 [vide Sardarni Bhagwan Kaur v. Rani Harnam Kaur (1)]. The property is already under attachment, so I am told; so it is itself sufficient security for the decree of 10th March 1908. As for the 2nd decree petitioner, has furnished security.

The ex parte order of 17th January, 1912 is accordingly confirmed. The property will not be sold pending decision of appeal but will remain under attachment.

Stay of execution granted.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit on a mortgage by manager of the family—Parties—Non-joinder—Suit, maintainability of.

A suit on a mortgage brought by some of the members of a joint Hindu family in their capacity as managers, does not fail because the other members of the family are not impleaded as parties.

Second appeal from the decision of Additional Judge of Meerut, dated the 27th March 1911.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit upon a mortgage, dated the 15th of March 1890, executed in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs. Three sons of the original mortgagee brought the suit. An adult and a minor member of the joint family were not made plaintiffs. The Court of first instance treated the suit by the plaintiffs as by the managers of a joint Hindu family and gave them a decree. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court decided all the other points raised in the appeal in favour of the plaintiffs and came to the conclusion that the adult son and minor grandson were necessary parties and that as they were not impleaded within the period of limitation, the defect was fatal to the suit. The son and the grandson in the lower Appellate Court filed an affidavit to the effect that the plaintiffs had instituted the suit in their capacity of the managers of the joint family. But the lower Appellate Court thought that that affidavit was too late. In second appeal, it is urged that the suit was instituted by the three plaintiffs as the managers of a joint Hindu family and that the case was covered by the recent Full Bench ruling of this Court in Madan Lal v. Kishen Singh (1). Though the plaintiffs did not state in so many words that they were suing in their capacity of managers, yet the tenor of the whole plaint leaves no doubt in our minds that they did sue in that capacity. In this view the omission of two members of the family from the plaint was not fatal to the suit. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs which in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal accepted.

Custom—Alienation—Suit to contest validity of mortgage brought by one son and grandson—Effect of other descendants admitting alienation—Holding unable to support alienor's large family.

In a suit to contest an alienation of ancestral land by a Jat, brought by one of his sons and a grandson, the facts that they delayed for nine years in bringing the suit, that other sons and grandsons had not joined and had admitted the validity of the alienation, and that the holding was unable to support the large family of the alienor, constitute strong evidence in support of the alienation.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge of Amritsar Division, dated the 30th day of October 1909, reversing that of the Honorary Munsif of the 1st class, Gurdaspur, dated the 15th day of July 1909, decreeing the plaintiff's claim.

Pandit Ram Bhaj Datta, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, one son and one grandson of a man, named Sant Singh, challenged a mortgage effected by the latter in 1900. Both Courts are agreed that Sant Singh found it impossible to maintain himself and his family from the land in dispute, and that the said land was at various times mortgaged to different persons. The Munsif found that necessity and consideration had both been proved in respect of Rs. 1,150 out of the total of Rs. 1,300 and that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiffs pro tanto. The mortgagee alone appealed to the Divisional Judge, who held that the full amount of the mortgage-money had been actually paid, and that there was no reason to doubt the necessity of the mortgagor in effecting the alienation. He accordingly accepted the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs throughout. He also held that the suit was premature as the mortgage was expressly made not redeemable until the expiry of 25 years.

The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court and I have heard arguments at some length on his behalf. I am not, however, convinced that the finding of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside It is quite clear from the judgments of both Courts that the land was unable to support Sant Singh, who had a wife, four sons, and several grandsons, and the very fact that one son, Ganga Singh, and one grandson, Jagat Singh, have refused to join the plaintiff and have admitted the validity of the mortgage as a whole, is a strong piece of evidence in support of the mortgagee. There is also the fact that the mortgage was executed in 1900 and that the plaintiffs made no attempt to contest it for nine years. It is also significant that the plaintiff himself has mortgaged this land to one Bhag Singh and that the term of that latter mortgage is 30 years. I see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the decree of lower Appellate Court and I dismiss this further appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Rent stated in kabulyat—Partition kept in abeyance or hajat for certain years—Landlord suing for full amount—Enhancement—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 29.

In a kabulyat, it was stated that the rent of the holding was Rs. 23 odd, that Rs. 14 odd was to be kept in abeyance and that for three years, the tenant would be liable to pay Rs. 8 odd. At the end of that time, he was to take a fresh settlement and execute a fresh kabulyat and if he did not do so, he was to be liable for rent at the rate of Rs. 23 odd. After the expiry of the period, no fresh settlement having been taken by the tenant, the landlord sued for rent at the higher amount:

Held, that rent being defined as what was lawfully payable in money, the amount payable during the first three years of the tenancy was Rs. 8 odd; that if at the end of that time the landlord desired to realise rent at Rs. 23, that was enhancement of the rent; that the stipulations in the kabulyat were a mere device to defeat the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the landlord was entitled to a decree for rent at Rs. 8 odd only.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Rungpur, dated March 11th, 1909, affirming that of the First Munsif of Nilphamari, dated September 4th, 1908.

Babu Hem Chandra Mitra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent based on a kabulyat dated the 5th Magh 1300 B. S. In that kabulyat, it was stated that the rent of the holding was Rs. 23 odd, that the sum of Rs. 14 odd was to be kept in abeyance and that for three years the tenant would be liable to pay the rent of Rs. 8 odd. At the end of that time, he was to take a fresh settlement and execute a fresh kabulyat and if he did not do so, he was to be liable for rent at the rate of Rs. 23.

The Courts below have held that this raising of the rent from Rs. 8 to Rs. 23 was not legal and have accordingly given the plaintiff a decree for rent at the rate of Rs. 8 odd.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court. It appears to us that the stipulations in the kabulyat, to which we have referred, are a mere device to defeat the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under that section, the money-rent of an occupancy-raiyat cannot be enhanced by contract except subject to certain conditions. The rent is defined as being what is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or in kind, and there can be no question whatever that during the three years from 1300-1302, the amount payable or deliverable to the landlord was Rs. 8 only. If at the end of that time, the landlord desired to realise rent at the rate of Rs. 23, it is idle to say that the rent was not enhanced. It is clearly the intention of section 29 that tenants should not be allowed to contract themselves out of the provisions of the Act and a landlord cannot be permitted to defeat the intention of the Act by inducing ignorant tenants to take his lands on an agreement to pay enhanced rents subsequently. Cultivators are notoriously lacking in foresight and probably could easily be tempted by the immediate advantage of getting land at a lower rate of rent to enter into unreasonable and extortionate agreements of this kind.

In our opinion, the view which the Courts below have taken in this case is correct and this appeal is dismissed but without costs as no one appears for the respondent.

Partnership account—Plaintiff to prove his own case.

As a plaintiff has to prove his own case, therefore, in a partnership suit, though the defendant may have been negligent in not keeping detailed account and may possibly be to blame for not producing books, the plaintiff cannot succeed if he has been, at least, equally negligent in not keeping up any correct detail of the various works undertaken and of the profits realised thereon.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Ambala Division, dated 24th October 1910, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, Ambala, dated 29th January 1910, decreeing the claim in part.

BUDHU SINGH v. BHAGWATI SINGH.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta, Lala Sangam Lal, and Mr. Roshan Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant, Budhu Singh, alone against the lower Appellate Court's decree in plaintiff's favour for Rs. 1,500 as against the appellant and Ram Diyal who has not appealed, but is represented by a Pleader, as respondent. We are satisfied that Ram Diyal is entitled to the benefit of Budhu Singh's appeal under the terms of rule 33, Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, and for practical purposes, the appeal is one on behalf of both the defendants against whom the lower Appellate Court's decree was passed.

The subject-matter of the dispute is a rather confused partnership account in respect of certain contract work done for the East Indian Railway in 1908 by the parties referred to above and a third defendant, named Balu Ram. The plaintiff's case has been dismissed as against Balu Ram and though the present appellant urged in ground 3 of this appeal that Balu Ram had been improperly discharged from liability, he has, in the course of argument, given up this plea as hopeless. The appellant's Counsel had to admit that Balu Ram is separately suing Budhu Singh for his share of the partnership proceeds, and that any dispute that may be between these two partners will be disposed of in that suit. We are, therefore, no longer concerned with the original co-defendant, Balu Ram.

The two questions, which we are then called in to deal with in the present appeal, relate to,—

(1) the extent of plaintiff's share in such contract work as was undertaken by these four partners; and

(2) the amount of capital contributed by the plaintiff and of his share of profits in the contract work done.

On the first point, the Sub-Judge passed a preliminary decree, dated the 8th January 1910, finding plaintiff's share in the partnership at one-fourth. This was adhered to in the final decree of the 29th January 1910, and the finding on the point has been accepted by the learned Divisional Judge. The plaintiff has not appealed on the point, but has urged that it should be re-considered in the event of any reduction being made in the decree for Rs. 1,500, passed in his favour by the Divisional Court. He has nothing to go on beyond certain oral evidence to the effect that he and Budhu Singh alone were the original contractors in equal shares of one-half. No document was drawn up in these terms when the work was first undertaken in May, 1908, in what is described as the Sabzi Mandi contract and plaintiff was not a party to a later document, dated the 6th July 1908, in which his share was put at one-fourth. We do not, however, attach importance to the oral evidence and we think it clear that though the plaintiff did not execute the document of the 6th July 1908, he was well aware at the time of the terms recorded thereon and made no sort of protest. He continued joining in the partnership work notwithstanding that his share of the profits was limited to one-fourth, and we see no reason for going further into a matter which is settled by the concurrent findings of the lower Courts. The decision on this point appears to us quite correct and we cannot allow that plaintiff is entitled to more than one-fourth of the profits.

On the second point stated above, it is not seriously in dispute that plaintiff's share of the capital provided by the parties was Rs. 907 or that he has been re-paid Rs. 664 out of the sum leaving a balance due to him in respect of capital of Rs. 243 as found by the lower Courts. The appellant has indeed attempted to show that the re-payments to plaintiff amount to Rs. 1,320 in two items of Rs. 664 and Rs. 656. It is, however, quite clear from the plaintiff's receipt, dated the 19th May 1909, and from the available accounts, that the item of Rs. 656 is included in the item of Rs. 664. The appellant's contention on this point fails hopelessly and we find that Rs. 243 is still due to plaintiff on account of capital advanced.

In regard to profits, the Sub-Judge found that these amounted to Rs. 2,000 as admitted by the defendants. Taking the plaintiff's share to be one-fourth, he decreed Rs. 500 as profit in addition to Rs. 243 on account of capital, or Rs. 743 in all, as against an original claim for Rs. 1,500. In the lower Appellate Court, there was no clear finding as to the amount of the profits realised, but the learned Divisional Judge assumed, on the basis of Jagna v. Gainda Mal(1), that plain-tiff's share of the profits should be not less than Rs. 1,257 and he accordingly raised the amount of plaintiff's decree to the full Rs. 1,500 claimed.

There is nothing definite to go on beyond the defendant's admission that the profits realised amounted to Rs. 2,000, and considering that the total capital contributed by all the partners was only Rs. 2,700 and that work was only proceeding for about a year, we cannot believe that the actual profit was largely in excess of Rs. 2,000 The plaintiff has alleged that the East Indian Railway made payments amounting to Rs. 7,000, but it is clear that these payments represent the aggregate of sums due on works undertaken successively, and the plaintiff's contention that Rs. 4,300 out of the sum should be treated as profit is altogether absurd. We do not think that the learned Divisional Judge has looked at the matter from the proper point of view. The plaintiff has to prove his own case and though the defendants may have been negligent in not keeping detailed accounts and may possibly be to blame for not producing books, the plaintiff has been at least equally negligent in not keeping up any correct detail of the various works undertaken and of the profits realised therein. So far as we can judge, the total profit in which plaintiff is entitled to share cannot have exceeded the sum of Rs. 2,000 admitted by defendants, and as both sides have been equally negligent, there is no reason why plaintiff should be given Rs 1,257 as profits merely because he has chosen to bring an exaggerated claim.

Our conclusion is, therefore, that the sum decreed to plaintiff in the first Court should not have been enhanced by the learned Divisional Judge. We accept the defendant's appeal to this extent and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and direct that the decree of the Sub-Judge for Rs. 743 be restored as against the defendants, Budhu Singh and Ram Dyal only. The suit will stand dismissed as against the defendant Balu Ram. The plaintiff's claim was, to start with, much exaggerated and all parties concerned are more or less to blame for the litigation. The order as to costs will, therefore, be that the parties shall pay their own throughout, including their costs in this Court.

Mr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's, father on the 19th of July 1899, executed a mortgage with possession in favour of Jagrup. One of the terms of the mortgage was that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem for 58 years. The mortgagor's son brought an action on the 9th of August 1910 for redemption of the mortgage. In paragraph 5 of his plaint, he stated as follows:—"The defendant has cunningly, fraudulently and dishonestly got the period of mortgage entered as 58 years in the deed of mortgage sought to be redeemed, which is most prejudicial and improper and is legally and equitably null and void". The fraud which the plaintiff attempted to prove was that a long term was entered in the mortgage-deed without the knowledge and consent of the mortgagor. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that there was non-joinder of parties and that the fraud alleged by the plaintiff was not proved. The lower Appellate Court affirmed the dismissal. In second appeal, it is urged that such a long period as was agreed upon in this case is unconscionable and hard and should, therefore, be set aside and in support of this contention reliance is placed upon Morgan v. Jeffreys (1), in which a term of 28 years was regarded as unreasonable.

(1) (1910) 1 Ch. D. 620; 74 J. P. 154; 26 T. L. R. 324; 79 L. J. Ch. 360.

The learned Vakil for the appellant also relies upon Bhawani v. Sheodihal (2). We are unable to accept the contention raised on behalf of the appellant. The learned Judges, who decided Syed Abdul Hak v. Ghulam Jilani (3), quote from a Printed Judgment in Ganesh v. Prahbakar, S. A. No. 191 of 1893, decided on August the 12th, 1895:—"The terms (35 years) may or may not have been hard, they were agreed to by adults, and there is neither allegation in the plaint nor proof in the cause that any undue advantage was taken." In the case before us, there was an allegation of fraud which has been held by the Courts below not to have been proved, and, therefore, the remarks made by the learned Judges fully apply to this case, and we see no reason to set aside the decrees of the Courts below, especially taking into account the fact that the period of limitation for redemption in this country is 60 years while in England it is only 12 years. The parties to the mortgage, without any duress or undue influence, came to that agreement, and, therefore, they cannot be allowed to go behind its terms. It was, however, contended that the recitals in the mortgage deed show that the mortgagor was a debtor of the mortgagee, and that, therefore, the latter took advantage of the helpless condition of the former and made him accept a very hard bargain. No such case was alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint, and at this stage of the litigation, we are not inclined to allow him to make a new case.

A fraud only was alleged but not proved. For these reasons, we uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale. As the suit is premature, it is unnecessary for us to pronounce any opinion on the question of non-joinder.

Appeal dismissed.

JAMBU PRASAD—APPELLANT

AFTAB ALI KHAN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 32, 33, 87—Presentation of document for registration by person holding general power-of-attorney, validity of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114—Presumption in favour of validity of registration—Presence of executant of document at the time of registration, effect of.

A Court will presume that a registered document was presented for registration by a person duly authorized under the law. But this presumption may be rebutted.

Where a document was proved to have been presented for registration by a person holding a general power of attorney, not authenticated in the manner prescribed by section 33 of the Registration Act and not authorising its holder to register documents:

Held, that the presumption in favour of the validity of registration proceedings was rebutted.

The provisions of sections 32 and 33 of the Registration Act are not open to a lax interpretation and the fact that the executant of a document was present and admitted execution when it was registered does not justify the inference that he was present at the moment when the document was actually presented for registration.

Where a document was presented for registration by a karinda (agent) of the executant and no attempt was made to prove that he did not hold a proper authority to present it:

Held, that the presumption in favour of the validity of the registration proceedings must be given effect to.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him Mr. Motilal Nehru), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, (with him Messrs. Abdul Raoof, Nehal Chand and S. A. Haidar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on two mortgages; the first executed on the 2nd July 1882, by Muhammad Ilias Khan, now deceased, the father of defendant No 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2, and by one Sayed Muhammad Khan, now deceased, who is represented by defendant No. 1; and the second executed on the 25th October 1882, by defendant No. 1 and Sayed Muhammad Khan, now represented by defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 3 has been joined as a puisne mortgagee.

JAMBU PRASAD v. AFTAB ALI KHAN.

The suit was defended on various grounds; among others, on the ground that the documents on which the suit was based had not been validly registered according to law. The learned Subordinate Judge framed the following issue:—

Whether or not the documents in suit had beed presented for registration by persons authorised to do so; and whether or not they had been validly registered; and whether or not they affected the property sought to be sold; and whether the claim for money was time-barred?

The Court below has found that the registration of both documents was invalid, and on this ground alone has dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appeals.

The material portions of the registration endorsements on the two documents are as follows:—

Section 32 of the Registration Act, III of 1877, the Act then in force, is as follows:—

"32. Except in the cases mentioned in sections 31 and 89, every document to be registered under this Act, whether such registration be compulsory or optional, shall be presented at the proper registration office,

"by some person executing or claiming under the same, or in the case of a copy of a decree or order, claiming under the decree or order, or by the representative or assign of such person,

"or by the agent of such person representative or assign, duly authorised by power-of-attorney executed and authenticated in manner hereinafter mentioned."

The material portions of section 33 are as follows:—

"33. For the purposes of section 32, the powers-of-attorney next hereinafter mentioned shall alone be recognized (that is to say)—

"(a) if the principal at the time of executing the power-of-attorney resides in any part of British India in which this Act is for the time being in force, a power of attorney executed before and authenticated by the Registrar or Sub-Registrar within whose district or sub-district the principal resides.

"Any power of attorney mentioned in this section may be proved by the production of it without further proof when it purports on the face of it to have been executed before and authenticated by the person or Court hereinbefore mentioned in that behalf."

In both the documents in suit, Lala Mitter Sen (now represented by plaintiff), in whose favour they were executed, is described as a resident of Saharanpur. It is not alleged that at the time of execution of these documents, Lala Mitter Sen resided elsewhere than at Saharanpur. The validity of the registration of the documents was impugned by the defendant No. 1 on the ground that they were presented for registration by persons not qualified under the Registration Act to make such presentation. The registration endorsements show that in the case of the mortgage-deed of 1882, it was presented by one Nathu Mal, described as the General Attorney of Lala Mitter Sen, and in the case of the mortgage of 1892, that it was presented by one Maula Bakhsh, described as karinda (agent).

There is on the record no power-of-attorney in favour of either Nathu Mal or Maula Bakhsh such as is required by section 33 (a).

In appeal, it is contended on behalf of the appellants that every presumption should be made in favour of the validity of the registration proceedings, and that it should be presumed that the Sub-Registrar had in each instance satisfied himself that the document was presented for registration by a person duly authorized under the law. Reliance is placed on the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Muhammad Ewaz v. Biri Lal (1):—

"Undoubtedly, it would be a most inconvenient rule if it were to be laid down generally that all Courts, upon the production of a deed which has the Registrar's endorsement of due registration, should be called on to inquire, before receiving it in evidence, whether the Registrar had properly performed his duty. Their Lordships think that this rule ought not to be thus broadly laid down.....If the registration could at any time, at whatever distance of time, be opened, parties would never know what to rely on, or when they would be safe."

We have been further referred to two unreported decisions of this Court in a First Appeal No. 210 of 1910, decided on the 10th January 1912, and in Wilaiti Begam v. Fazal Hussain (2). The facts of neither case bear any resemblance to those of the case before us. In First Appeal No. 210 of 1910, the Court said:—

"In our opinion, the production of the bond with the certificate of due registration endorsed thereon raised a strong presumption in favour of the due registration of the bond, and that in the absence of clear proof that the requirements of law were not complied with, the Court was bound to admit the documents in evidence. Section 114 of the Evidence Act coupled with section 60 of the Registration Act seems to us to be abundant justification for the proposition."

Conceding the existence of the presumption contended for by the learned Advocate for the appellant, we have to consider the evidence by which the respondent sought to rebut that presumption. They called the Sub-Registrar of Saharanpur to produce the register of powers of-attorneys for the Saharanpur division from 1878 to 1886. The Sub-Registrar appeared as a witness. His evidence printed at page 1 of the respondent's book shows that he produced in Court Register No. 4 of 1882. That register contained a general power-of-attorney registered on the 19th of July 1882 (13 days before the execution of the mortgage-deed of 1882) executed by Lala Mitter Sen in favour of Nathu Mal. The power of attorney did not authorize Nathu Mal to register documents on behalf of Lala Mitter Sen nor was it authenticated in the manner prescribed by section 33 of the Registration Act.

The evidence of this witness was recorded on the 30th August 1910. The suit was not decided until the 26th September 1910. The plaintiff, therefore, had ample time in which to have a thorough search made in the records of the registration office. No other power of attorney except that deposed to by the Sub-Registrar has come to light. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the respondents have not exhausted every possibility, but we must hold nevertheless that the respondents have established by evidence the existence of a very strong probability that Nathu Mal held no such power of attorney as would authorise him to present documents for registration, and that in respect of the deed of 1832, the respondents have succeeded in rebutting the presumption in favour of the validity of registration proceedings.

(1) 4 I. A. 166; 1 A. 465.

(2) 13 Ind. Cas. 961; 9 A. L. J. 148.

With regard to the deed of the 25th October 1892, the matter stands on a different footing. The registration endorsement shows that the document was presented for registration by one Maula Bakhsh described as a karinda (agent). In paper No. 213 a petition filed in the Court below on behalf of the respondent No. 1, it was stated that Maula Bakhsh was not a general attorney He appears to have been employed as a karinda (agent) by the executants of the bond. No power-of-attorney in his favour is on the record, nor is there any evidence that any such power-of attorney exists. There is no proof of any search having been made for powers of attorney between 1883 and 1892. In the case of the mortgage-deed of the 25th October 1892, therefore, we must give effect to the presumption in favour of the validity of the registration proceedings.

It was further contended on behalf of the appellants that the substance of the proceedings before the Sub-Registrar should be looked to, and that it was immaterial by whose hands the document reached that of the Sub-Registrar, provided there were persons present before that official who were qualified under the law to have the document of 1882 registered. It is pointed out that the registration endorsement on that document shows that the executants were present before the Sub-Registrar and admitted the execution of the document. We were also referred to the evidence of one Gobind Rai, a witness called by the plaintiff. He was an attesting witness to the document. He says that he was present at the registration and that the executants asked Nathu Mal to present the documents before the Sub-Registrar. The learned Subordinate Judge did not believe his evidence. He was produced on the 21st September 1910, (by which time the plaintiff had realised that Nathu Mal was not duly authorized to present the document for the registration), no doubt, with the object of showing that Nathu Mal had handed the document to the Sub-Registrar at the request of the executants. We think it impossible for him to remember such a trifling incident after a lapse of 28 years, and we do not accept his evidence. As to the other branch of the argument for the appellant that the executants who were present at the registration office should be regarded as the persons presenting the document for registration, there is the initial obstacle in the way of the appellant that the registration endorsement shows that it was presented by Nathu Mal. It has not been proved in this case that the executants were actually present when the document was presented for registration. Their presence in the office of the Sub Registrar at that particular moment of time cannot be inferred from the registration endorsement. The only inference that can be drawn from that endorsement is that the executants attended the Sub-Registrar's office on the same day as the document was presented. The argument on behalf of the appellant is in effect that it does not really matter by whom the document was presented for registration provided the executants appeared before the Sub-Registrar and admitted execution. The provisions of sections 32 and 33 of the Registration Act III of 1877, are not open to this lax interpretation. In Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed.

"When the terms of section 32 are considered with due regard to the nature of registration of deeds, it is clear that the power and jurisdiction of the Registrar only come into play when he is invoked by some person having a direct relation to the deed."

In this case, we have found that the mortgage-deed of 1882 was presented by Nathu Mal, a person who had no authority to present the document for registration. In view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, set out above, we are unable to hold that this initial defect, if it can be said to be merely a defect, can be held to be cured by the subsequent admission of execution by the executants. Nor can we hold that the provisions of section 87 of the Act can be invoked in aid of the validation of registration proceedings done in violation of the express provisions of sections 32 and 33 of the Registration Act.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal in so far as the suit on the mortgage-deed of the 2nd July 1892, is concerned. We allow the appeal in so far as the suit on the mortgage-deed of the 25th October 1892, is concerned. The respondents will receive their proportionate costs in both Courts in so far as they have been successful. The costs of the appeal in so far as the suit on the second mortgage is concerned will be costs in the cause. We remand the case for decision on the merits, in respect of the mortgage-deed of the 25th October, 1892.

Decree reversed: Cause remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 cl. (c)—Cause of action, accrual of—Parties resident of place where money advanced—Absence of agreement to re-pay at other place—Presumption that money to be re-paid where transaction took place—Jurisdiction of Court—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 49, 50.

In a hat-chita, on which a suit was brought, the creditor was described as resident of S. within the jurisdiction of the Katwa Court, the money was alleged to have been advanced at S., and the parties at the time of the loan were residents of that place:

Held, that the money was presumably re-payable at S. where it was advanced and where the parties resided at the time of the transaction, and the Court at Katwa only had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the matter in the absence of any proof of any agreement for re-payment of the money at some other place.

Section 49 of the Contract Act does not apply where the money is payable on demand and not "without application by the promisee."

Raman Chettiyar v. Gopalachari, 31 M. 223 at p. 228, 4 M. L. T. 97 followed.

Section 50 of the Contract Act merely lays down the elementary rule that a promisor is discharged from liability if he performs the promise in a manner or at a time prescribed or sanctioned by the promisee.

Rule against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Burdwan, dated April 24th, 1912.

Babu Hemendra Nath Sen, for the Petitioner.

Babus Bipin Bihari Ghosh (Junior), Khetter Mohan Sen and Bankim Chandra Mukherji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside a decree of a Court of Small Causes on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction. The plaintiffs sued to recover money due on a hat chita alleged to have been executed in their favour by the defendants on the 29th January 1910. Monetary transactions between the parties and their predecessors appear to have been of considerable standing. The original hat-chita was granted in favour of the father of the plaintiffs. In that hat-chita, the parties were described as residents of Shibloon (within the jurisdiction of the Court of Katwa), and in the hat-chita on which the suit is brought the creditors are similarly described as residents of Shibloon. The money is alleged to have been advanced at Shibloon; the parties, at the time of the loan, were residents of that place where their ancestral housesare situated. Prima facie, therefore, the Court at Katwa has jurisdiction to take cognizance of the matter, under section 20 clause (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The plaintiffs, however, assert that they are entitled to maintain the suit in the Burdwan Court, because the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of that Court. One of the plaintiffs now resides in Burdwan and practises there as a Pleader, and it was sought to be proved in the Court below that there was an agreement for payment of the money at Burdwan. The Small Cause Court Judge, however, has not expressly found that there was such an agreement although he has noticed this allegation on the part of the plaintiffs. In the plaint itself, it is not asserted that at the time of the loan the parties agreed that the money should be re-paid, not where it was advanced but at Burdwan where one of the creditors resided. In the notice of demand sent on the 15th January 1912, there is no allegation of such an agreement between the parties. Under these circumstances, it is fairly clear that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that the Burdwan Court has jurisdiction.

The case before us is very much stronger than that of Raman Chettiyar v. Gopalachari (1). There, a promissory-note payable on demand was made at Tanjore and no place was fixed expressly or impliedly for payment. The creditor, however, resided at Kumbakonam and he commenced the suit within the jurisdiction of the Court at Kumbakonam. It was held that the suit was not maintainable at Kumbakonam. Sir Arnold White, C. J., pointed out that, under these circumstances, looking at the contract and at the facts which existed at the time the contract was made, the contract must be taken to have been intended to be performed within the jurisdiction of the Court at Tanjore [see the judgment of Cotton, L. J., in Reynolds v. Coleman (2) and of Lindley, L. J., in Rein v. Stein (3)]. In the case before us, it must be borne in mind that when the amount was originally advanced, the contract was with the father of the plaintiffs and there is no suggestion that he ever resided at Burdwan; there is no presumption, therefore, that there was any agreement to re-pay the loan at Burdwan. The fact that in the notice of demand, the debtors were called upon to pay the money at Burdwan does not plainly affect their position. The money was presumably re-payable at Shibloon where it was advanced and where both the parties resided at the time of the transaction; that presumption has not been rebutted by the plaintiffs by proof of an agreement to the contrary. Section 49 of the Indian Contract Act is of no avail to the plaintiffs, because as pointed out by Sir Arnold White, C. J., in Raman Chettiar v. Gopalachari (1), that section does not apply where, as here, the money is payable on demand and not "without application by the promisee." Section 50 also is of no assistance as it merely lays down the elementary rule that a promisor is discharged from liability if he performs the promise in a manner or at a time prescribed or sanctioned by the promisee.

It is worthy of note that the objection as to jurisdiction taken in the Court below and re-iterated here is of substance and not of form, because if the suit is tried at Katwa, it will be tried as a regular Civil suit by a Munsif and an appeal on the facts will lie to the District Judge, whereas if it is heard at Burdwan, it is summarily tried as a Small Cause Court suit. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Rule must be made absolute, the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge discharged, and that Court directed to return the plaint to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. The petitioners are entitled to the costs of this Rule. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

THOMPSON, FLORENCE AMELIA—PETITIONER

THOMPSON, GEORGE S.—RESPONDENT.

Divorce—Adultery, incestuous, by husband—Condonation by wife—Subsequent conduct of husband—Treatment of wife with silent indifference—Injury to wife's health—Cruelty—Revival of condoned adultery.

A wife condoned her husband's incestuous adultery with her sister. Subsequently, he treated his wife with silent indifference and in consequence her health suffered:

Held, that the conduct of the husband was such as to revive the condoned incestuous adultery of the husband and the wife was entitled to a divorce.

Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. Eccl. Rep. 733 at p. 761; Bramwell v. Bramwell, 3 Hag. Eccl. Rep. 618; Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 126; 32 L. J. Mat. 154; 9 Jur. (N S.) 754; 8 L.T. 644; 11 W.R. 957 and Ridgway v. Ridgway, 29 W. R. Eng. 612, followed.

Messrs. Buckland and Langford James, for the Wife.

Messrs. Avetoom and Bagram, for the Husband.

Messrs. E. P. Ghose and H G. Pearson, for the Co-respondent Hugh Doherty.

JUDGMENT.—These are two cross-petitions for divorce, which by the consent of the parties were heard together.

FLORENCE AMELIA THOMPSON v. GEORGE S. THOMPSON.

The first petition presented by the wife, Florence Amelia Thompson, against her husband, George Sprott Thompson, claims a divorce on the ground of incestuous adultery by the husband. In answer to that petition, the husband denies the incestuous adultery, and charges his wife with adultery, (the same acts which form the subject of the second petition), and the answer to the husband's petition is a denial by the wife, and the acts of which she complains in her own petition. Therefore, the facts in the two petitions are the same, the position only being reversed; the husband being in the one case respondent and in the other case, petitioner. The co-respondent to the husband's petition is Hugh Doherty, who is in business in Calcutta.

It appears from the petition and the evidence that the husband and wife were married on the 31st of October 1901 at the Congregational Chapel at Hastings in this town.

The parties profess the Christian religion.

After the marriage, the parties first of all lived in a boarding house in 13, Camac Street, and then they removed to 13, Telkul Ghat Road, Howrah, as being nearer the husband's place of work, the husband being employed in an engineering firm at Howrah; and after that they left that residence where they were for two and a half years, and lived in 28, Grand Trunk Road together, until the wife finally left her husband on the 25th of March 1911.

There is one child of the marriage, Sylvia Irene, born on the 23rd September 1905.

The wife charges in paragraph 4 of the petition "that on various occasions, in or about November or December 1908, the respondent at 13, Telkul Ghat Road, committed incestuous adultery with Ada Goodwin, the sister of the petitioner, who was then residing with your petitioner." * * *

I have no doubt that the husband committed incestuous adultery with his sister-in-law.

The next question is, has that incestuous adultery been revived by the subsequent conduct of the husband? First of all, it is necessary to decide in what manner condoned adultery is revived, and I refer to the cases cited in the Court of Arches. First, there is the case of Durant v. Durant (1). There the Dean of the Arches expressed his opinion thus: "Under these authorities (which he cited), I am inclined to hold: first, that cruelty will revive adultery, and, secondly, that less is necessary to revive than to found an original sentence." Then there is the case of Bramwell v. Bramwell (2). That was decided by a very distinguished Judge, Dr. Lushington. He followed the opinion that has been expressed by Sir John Nichols, Dean of the Arches, in Dowden v. Dowden. That was also followed in two other cases, the first one of which is Cooke v. Cooke (3). After the constitution of the Royal Court for Matrimonial Cases, when the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction had been taken away, a Judge in that Court (I think it was Sir John Wilde) also adopted the opinion which has been expressed in those other cases. It has been followed also by the late President of the Probate and Divorce Division, Lord Hannen, in the case of Ridgway v. Ridgway (4). So one must apply one's mind to this case having regard to the authorities that have been cited.

The husband has failed to establish that the wife and co-respondent committed adultery.

The question is, has the incestuous adultery, which the wife condoned certainly on the 1st January 1909, been restored by the subsequent conduct of the husband?

I am satisfied that the husband in this case, as Mrs. Keble said, only spoke to his wife on household matters. That, obviously, was not the terms on which the wife forgave the husband. The wife forgave the husband on the footing that if she came back to him, he should conduct himself, in a manner in which a husband should conduct himself, not that the wife should be spoken to only on household matters, and that she should be treated with what has been called in the case "silent indifference."

The evidence in this case shows that the wife's health has suffered.

I do not agree with the statement as to why marital intercourse ceased, namely, that the ayah told the husband something. I think it is much more probable that the husband had during his absence from his wife acquired vicious habits. That a man should during this long period, even admitting the absence of the wife during the hot weather in Darjeeling, sleep alongside a young wife without resuming marital intercourse is very unusual, and that the husband satisfied his passions in other ways is very probable. Apart from the fact that the husband gave way to disgusting habits, it is a fact that the wife's health suffered in consequence of the husband's treatment.

In my opinion, the wife has established in this case that her health suffered by the conduct of the husband after she condoned his incestuous adultery, and the result of that is that the incestuous adultery has been revived, and, therefore, the wife is entitled to a decree.

On the wife's petition, I grant a decree nisi with the usual order for costs, including all reserved costs, and the husband's petition is dismissed with costs against the respondent and co-respondent. The wife to have custody of the child.

CHUNNOO LAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 72, 90—Permission to bid granted to decree-holder subject to certain conditions, validity of—Purchase without abiding the conditions, effect of—Sale, whether in such a case valid or not—Joinder of a stranger, effect of—Separation of interests purchased in the case of one joint bid.

The mere fact that a decree-holder has associated with himself a stranger would not make a sale valid when the bid is a joint one and the interest of the decree-holder cannot be separated.

The law authorizes a Court to impose any condition it considers fit on the permission granted to a decree-holder to bid at a sale of the property of his judgment-debtor. An order imposing on the decree-holder a condition that his lowest bid should be the amount of the decree, is not ultra vires or illegal, but valid and enforceable.

Srimati Sarat Kumari Debi v. Nimai Charan Dey, 5 C. W. N. 265, followed.

Wazir Ali v. Janki Prasad, 28 A. 671; 3 A. L. J. 458; A. W. N. (1906) 183, Lakhraj v. Shamlal, 16 B. 404, distinguished.

The conduct of a decree-holder, who evades a condition imposed and colludes with strangers to bid with him in purchasing the property for much less than the decretal sum, amounts clearly to fraud.

Srimati Sarat Kumari Debi v. Nimai Charn Dey, 5 C. W. N. 265, followed.

The mere fact that the decree-holder agrees to bid for the property for the amount of the decree and purchases it for a sum much less than that amount, is sufficient to show that his fraud has led to substantial loss.

Such a sale is bad and should be set aside.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that the respondents Nos. 1 to 4 and Gauri Shanker, the husband of respondent No. 5, obtained a decree for Rs. 15,000 on 27th of September 1902 against Mahant Pitambar Das, Thakur Drigbijai Singh and Thakurain Raj Kunwar, wife of the latter. The first application for execution of decree was made by the decree-holders on the 9th of September 1907 by which they asked for the attachment of moveable property. No property was found and the application was consigned to the Record Room. On the 28th of October 1907, another application was made by which the decree holders sought to attach three villages. The Court executing the decree allowed the application with regard to village Chandnapur only, which was attached. The decree-holders filed a third application on the 28th August 1908, asking for the attachment of two more villages viz., Maraura and Bhanpur. The application was allowed and the two villages were attached. But the proceedings on the applications of the 28th of October 1907 and the 28th of August 1908 were stayed under the orders of the Government. On the 11th of March 1909, the decree-holders applied for the sale of the three attached villages. A sale statement was submitted to the Government and the sanction for sale of the said of three villages was granted on the 5th of December 1910. An order for the sale of the villages was accordingly made. But before the date fixed for sale the decree-holders applied to the lower Court for permission to bid at auction. The lower Court granted the permission in the following words:—

Ijazat kharidari nilam dijati hai bashhrteke sab se ziyada boli baqadar matalba digridar ke ho. Rasid basharat khatam hone nilam digridar se dakhil karai jawe.

"Permission to purchase at auction is granted provided the highest bid is by the decree-holders and the bid is equivalent to the amount of the decree. In case the sale is concluded in favour of the decree-holders, a receipt for the satisfaction of the decree will be taken from them."

The sale was held on the 20th of June 1911, at which the three villages were sold in one lot and knocked down to the decree-holders and two strangers for Rs 8,240. On the 19th July 1911, the judgment-debtor filed objections to the sale. It was urged before the lower Court that the decree-holders had not observed the terms upon which permission to bid at auction was granted to them and that their collusion with two other bidders had prevented the sale of the property at its proper value.

The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the objections. He said that he did not mean by his order of the 25th February 1911 that the lowest bid of the decree-holders was to be equivalent to the decretal amount. He saw no collusion and no harm in the conduct of the decree-holders in getting two strangers to join in the purchase of the property. He thought that the villages had been sold at a fair price. The judgment-debtor has preferred this appeal and repeats before us the objections urged before the lower Court. The learned Counsel for the decree-holders and the two strangers admit that the order of 25th of February 1911 can only have one meaning, viz., that permission was given to the decree-holders to bid provided their lowest bid was equivalent to the decretal amount. But it is argued that such an order was ultra vires. The Court passing such an order could and should withdraw it or ignore it. The following cases are cited in support of the agrument:—Wazir Ali v. Janki Prasad (1); Lekhrai v. Shamlal (2).

It is further contended that the Court executing the decree has a discretion as to whether a sale should be confirmed or set aside. The lower Court exercised its discretion and properly in favour of the decree-holders. The Court ought not to interfere with that discretion. Moreover, it is said that no sale can be set aside unless the alleged irregularity is attended with substantial loss to the judgment-debtor. In the present case, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the three villages have been sold at a fair price.

We do not think that the order of the lower Court passed on the 25th February 1911, imposing on the decree-holders the condition that their lowest bid should be the amount of the decree, was ultra vires or illegal. The law authorizes a Court to impose any condition it considers fit on the permission to a decree-holder to bid at the sale of the property of his judgment-debtor. The condition fixing a certain sum as the lowest bid of the decree-holder prevents him from colluding with the other bidders and getting the property at an unfair price. Such a condition has been recognised to be enforceable and valid. Vide Srimati Sarat Kumari Debi v. Nimai Charan Dey (3).

The cases cited by the learned Counsel for the decree-holders do not relate to the point under discussion. All that is laid down in Wazir Ali v. Janki Prasad (1) and Lekhraj v. Sham Lal (2) is, that a Court is competent to withdraw its order if it considers it objectionable and illegal. The order of the lower Court, dated the 25th February 1911, being legal, the conduct of the decree-holders in evading the condition imposed by that order by joining two strangers to bid with them and purchasing the property for much less than the decretal sum amounts clearly to fraud. This view is borne out by the case of Srimati Sarat Kumari Debi v. Nimai Charan Dey (3). But it is said that fraud alone will not vitiate the sale unless it has led to substantial loss. And the lower Court has held that there has been no such loss. We are unable to agree with the lower Court. The mere fact that the decree-holders agreed to bid for the property for the amount of the decree which was more than Rs 23,000 and purchased the property for Rs. 8,240 shows that their fraud has led to substantial loss.

(1) 28 A. 671; 3 A. L. J. 458; A. W. N. (1906) 183.
(2) 16 B. 404.
(3) 5 C. W. N. 265.

One more argument remains to be considered. It is urged for Munnu Lal, one of the strangers who joined the decree-holders in the bid at auction, that he should not suffer by the conduct of the decree-holders. The property was sold in one bid and Munnu Lal did make an independent bid.

He joined the decree-holders in the purchase of the property. He cannot, therefore, ask that his interest, whatever that might be, should be separated from that of the decree-holders, and the sale to the extent of his interest should be confirmed.

We accept the appeal, reverse the order of the lower Court and set aside the sale. Costs are allowed to the appellant.

RAMJI—APPELLANT

SHEIKH MANSUR—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 10—Pre-emption—Property leased to vendee—"Capable of physical possession"—Limitation—Merger—Res judicata—Estoppel—Suit for pre-emption—Plea of bar by limitation—Suit dismissed as premature—Plea of limitation in subsequent suit.

When property sold is in the possession of another person as lessee, it is not capable of being taken into physical possession by the vendee, and the limitation for a pre-emption claim runs from the date of the registration of the deed of sale.

Batul Begum v Mansur Ali Khan, 24 A. 17, 3 Bom. L. R. 707; 5 C. W. N. 888; 28 I. A. 248, referred to.

Gauhri Mal v. Jainti Mal, 73 P. R. 1885 and Mansabdar v. Nabi Baksh, 43 P. R. 1900, followed.

Yesaji v. Ramkrishna, 3 N. L R. 142 and Ganpat Rai v. Masita Khan, A.W.N.(1887) 235, not followed.

By a sale deed executed and registered on the 26th June 1897, A. purchased certain land. The land conveyed by the sale had already been leased to A. for nine years by a lease executed on the 9th April 1895 and expiring on the 5th June 1904. The sale-deed purported to take effect from the expiry of the lease but did not reserve any rent to the vendor.

On 1st July 1903, B. filed a suit for pre-emption against A., who pleaded that the suit was time-barred. B., then, urged that the sale only took effect from the date of the expiry of the lease. It was then pleaded on A's. behalf that in that case the suit was premature, and on that view, it was dismissed.

On the expiry of the lease, B. again sued A. for pre-emption:

Held, (1) that there was no res judicata against A. as the decision in the previous suit merely amounted to this that on B.'s own contention, the claim then made was premature; there was no decision of the plea that the claim was even then time-barred or not;

Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer, 11 C. 301; 12 I.A. 23 referred to.

(2) that there was no estoppel by A.'s plea in the former case as B.'s position had in no way been affected by it, for if limitation ran from the date of sale, the claim was then already barred;

(3) that if the lease did not merge in the sale, the present suit was barred under the 2nd part of the third column of Article 10 of the Limitation Act;

(4) that if the lease merged in the sale, the possession of A. was under the sale from the date of sale and on this view too, the suit was time-barred.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 28th July 1908, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Akola, dated the 31st March 1908.

Messrs. J. Mittra and G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent is a co-occupant of a survey number in Berar, and sues for pre-emption in respect of part of the survey number sold to the defendant-appellant by one Chimnaji by a sale-deed executed on the 26th June 1897, and registered the same day. The land conveyed by the sale had already been leased to the defendant by Chimnaji for nine years by a lease executed on the 9th April 1895, and expiring on the 5th June 1904; and the sale-deed purports to take effect from the expiry of the lease, but does not reserve any rent to the vendor, beyond the Government revenue, which was to be paid by the vendee. Neither did the lease reserve any, as the consideration consisted of a cash premium of Rs. 50 and an agreement that the lessee would pay another Rs. 50 to a creditor of the lessor. And though the sale-deed purports to take effect from the end of the lease by the words 'After completion of the years it is sold to you', it goes on to say "The immoveable property mentioned above is sold to you for the above amount. You are full owner of it. No rights now remain with me. The khata of the field would be transferred to your name whenever you ask for it. If any one brings a suit regarding the share, I shall be responsible for it. You shall not be put to expense and molestation."

The plaintiff filed a suit for pre-emption on the 1st July 1903, more than six years after the registration of the defendant's sale-deed, but before the expiry of the lease, and on the defendant's pleading that the suit was time-barred, urged that the sale only took effect on the expiry of the lease. It was then pleaded on the defendant's behalf that in that case the suit was premature, and on that view it was dismissed. The plaintiff appealed, but on the 16th December 1903, his appeal was withdrawn, his Pleader admitting that the suit was premature. The present suit was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 15th July 1906, and it has not been made clear to me how the plaintiff brings it within time, even if his cause of action is held to have accrued on the expiry of the defendant's lease. But apparently the plaint was originally presented in another Court in June 1904, and the proceedings in that Court lasted till the 6th July 1905, when after amendment and payment of additional Court-fee, the plaint was returned for presentation to a Court having jurisdiction. The question of the plaintiff's right to exclusion of this period was raised in the first Court, and an issue framed:—"Was the suit barred when the plaint was presented to this Court on the 6th of July 1905, assuming that the cause of action arose in June 1904?" On this issue, the first Court gave a decision which, as it stands, is inconsistent with the decree passed by it in the plaintiff's favour, viz., "Plaintiff was bona fide going on with the proceedings in the Munsif's Court, and I do not, therefore, think that although the plaint was presented in this Court on the 6th July 1905, plaintiff is entitled to deduction of time during which he was going on with the proceedings in Munsif's Court." Apparently, the words 'do not' should have been omitted. The point has not been raised before me and only attracted my attention when I was writing my judgment. Learned Counsel on both sides assumed that the suit was within time, if the plaintiff's cause of action arose on the expiry of the defendant's lease, and the view I take of this question, makes it unnecessary that I should call for the Munsif's record, and satisfy myself that the plaintiff is entitled to exclusion of the time spent in his Court, and that if this is allowed, the suit was filed within one year of the expiry of the lease.

That the plaintiff's cause of action accrued on the expiry of the defendant's lease is said to have been decided in his favour by the ruling of this Court in Yesaji v. Ramkrishna (1), and by the decision in the previous litigation. The first Court was inclined to distinguish the case of Yesaji v. Ramkrishna (1), but held the question of limitation concluded by the previous decision between the parties, and gave the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption. The defendant appealed, but the lower Appellate Court, holding the first part of Article 10 applicable, and that possession under the sale was only taken with effect from the expiry of the lease, dismissed the appeal.

The defendant has come up in second appeal, and the appeal must, in my opinion, succeed. There is no res judicata against him, as the decision in the previous case merely amounts to this, that on the plaintiff's own contention the claim then made was premature; so there was no decision of the plea raised by him that the plaintiff's claim was even then time-barred, and the decree passed was, in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (2), "not based upon" his plea of limitation but made "in spite of it." And there is no estoppel by his plea in the former case, as the plaintiff's position has been in no way affected by it, for if limitation runs from the date of the sale, the claim was then already time-barred. And the defendant then as now raised the plea of limitation, but, the case being decided in his favour on another point arising out of the plaintiff's own statement of his case, and the appeal withdrawn, was unable to urge his plea of limitation before the higher tribunals. It would have been a different matter if the former suit had been within time, counting from the date of the sale, and had been dismissed on an objection by the defendant that it was premature.

(1) 3 N. L. R. 142.
(2) 11 C. 301; 12 I. A. 23.

The Article of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act applicable is clearly 10 and not 120, which was only held applicable by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali Khan (3) and by the Allahabad High Court in Kounshilla Kuar v. Gopal Prasad (4), as those were suits for pre-emption on the foreclosure of mortgages so there was no instrument of sale, from the registration of which limitation could be reckoned, and the property not being capable of physical possession, the general and residuary Article 120 was resorted to. But in this case, as in that of Yesaji v. Ramkrishna (1), the property having been transferred by registered sale-deed, Article 10 is clearly applicable, and this was not disputed before me.

My learned predecessor held in that case that a deferred sale took effect from the date agreed upon by the parties, and that if possession was given under it from that date, that would be 'personal and immediate possession' within the meaning of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali Khan (3), and limitation under the first part of Article 10 would run from the date, on which possession was so given. With all deference, I am unable to concur in this view, and think their Lordships' dictum will be more correctly applied by following the Chief Court of the Punjab in Gauhri Mal v. Jainti Mal (5) and the previous decisions therein cited, in which it was held that when property sold is in the possession of a third party as tenant, it is not capable of being taken into physical possession by the vendee, and the limitation for a pre-emption claim runs from the date of the registration of the deed of sale. The later decision of the same Court in Mansabdar v. Nabi Bakhsh (6) also supports this view and I concur with the remarks of Harris, J:—

"That possession was not with the vendors at the time of sale does not prevent the sale being complete..... Delivery is not necessary to complete the vendee's title. Such title as the vendor can convey passes to the vendee on execution of the registered deed, and the fact that the vendor was at the time of sale neither in actual nor in constructive possession does not prevent a valid title passing under the deed."

The decision of Tyrell, J., in Ganpat Rai v. Masita Khan (7) is against this view and in favour of that taken by my learned predecessor in Yesaji v. Ramkrishna (1); but the facts of that case are not fully stated, and the parties seem to have agreed that the sale should only take effect when the property was severed, whereas in this case the vendor's proprietary right passed to the vendee by the deed of sale, and only a tenant-right was kept alive. And it did not, I think, make any difference that the tenant was himself the vendee, provided, of course, his lease did not merge in the sale, whilst if it did merge in the sale, his possession was under the sale from the date thereof. I need not, therefore, go into the question of merger either as to the correctness of the decision on that point in Yesaji v. Ramkrishna (1), or as to whether this case can be distinguished on the ground that no beneficial interest was retained by the vendor. Even if the lease did not merge in the sale, there was, in my opinion, in this case an out-and-out sale of the vendor's remaining interest, which took effect from the date of the sale; and as the proprietary right thus sold was, by reason of the subsisting lease not capable of immediate physical possession, the second part of Article 10 applied, and time ran against the right of pre-emption from the date of registration of the sale-deed.

The plaintiff's suit being time-barred, the appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below reversed, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against the decision of the District Judge of the 24-Pargannas, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge and dismissing the appellant's suit for the setting aside of a decree on the ground of fraud.

In 1906, the appellant was sued on ejectment by the respondent, and a decree was obtained against him ex parte. An application for the discharge of that decree and the re-hearing of the suit was made under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882; but it was refused, and the refusal was affirmed on appeal. A regular appeal against the ex parte decree was next preferred; but it was dismissed by the first Appellate Court, and a second appeal to the High Court, was equally unsuccessful. The suit, out of which the present second appeal arises, was then instituted; and the only fraud complained of in it is that the description in the plaint of the subject-matter of the respondent's suit of 1906, and the evidence on which the respondent obtained the ex parte decree against the appellant, were alike false. Both the Courts below have held that this suit was not maintainable, and the short point raised before us is as to whether an action will lie for the setting aside of a decree merely on the ground that it was based upon perjured evidence.

In Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman(1), Petheram, C. J., laid it down that, where a decree has been obtained by a fraud practised on another whereby that other has been prevented from placing his case before the tribunal, which was called upon to adjudicate upon it, in the way most to his advantage, the decree is not binding upon him and may be set aside in a separate suit; but that "it is not the law that, because a person against whom a decree has been passed, alleges that it is wrong and that it was obtained by perjury committed by, or at the instance of, the other party, which is, of course, fraud of the worst kind, he can obtain a re-hearing of the questions in dispute in a fresh action by merely changing the form in which he places it before the Court, and alleging in his plaint that the first decree was obtained by the perjury of the person in whose favour it was given." "To so hold would," the learned Chief Justice continued, "be to allow defeated litigants to avoid the operation, not only of the law which regulates appeals, but also of that which relates to res judicata as well;" and reference was made to the reasons why this could not be given by James, L. J., on behalf of himself and Thesiger. L. J., in Flower v. Lloyd (2): "Where," Lord Justice James inquired, "is litigation to end, if a judgment obtained in an action fought out adversely between two litigants sui juris and at arm's length, could be set aside by a fresh action on the ground that perjury had been committed in the first actions * * * * ? There are hundreds of actions tried every year in which the evidence is irreconcilably conflicting, and must be on one side or other wilfully and corruptly perjured. In this case, if the plaintiffs had sustained on this appeal the judgment in their favour, the present defendants, in their turn, might bring a fresh action to set that judgment aside on the ground of perjury of the principal witness and subornation of perjury; and so the parties might go on alternately ad infinitum * * * Perjuries, falsehoods, frauds, when detected, must be punished and punished severely; but, in their desire to prevent parties litigant from obtaining any benefit from such foul means, the Court must not forget the evils which may arise from opening such new sources of litigation, amongst such evils not the least being that it would be certain to multiply infinitely the mass of those very perjuries, falsehoods and frauds."

(1) 21 C. 612 at p. 619.
(2) 10 Ch. D. 327; 39 L. T. 613; 27 W. R. 496.

It is true that the observations of Sir Comer Petheram in Mahomed Golab's case (1) are not binding upon us because the actual decision in it reduced them to the level of obiter dicta. But the view his Lordship expressed was cited and acted upon by a Division Bench of this Court in Abdul Haque v. Abdul Hafiz (3) and, as that decision is precisely in point, it is an authority which we must, under rule 1 in Chapter V of the Appellate Side Rules, follow or make the subject of a reference to a Full Bench. Another Division Bench, it appears, has recently, in the case of Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (4), refused to be so bound, because, the learned Judges (D. Chatterjee and N.R. Chatterjea, JJ.) said, "the authority on which the judgment of Sir Comer Petheram, C.J., was based, has never been recognised as an authority in England," and, therefore, neither it nor any case based upon it was, in their opinion, binding upon them. We are not disposed to adopt this reasoning, and, in any case, having the two opposing rulings before us, we prefer to follow Abdul Huqe v. Abdul Hafiz (3). We find that a Division Bench of the Madras High Court has, in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (5), taken the contrary view and ruled that a suit will lie to set aside a judgment on the ground that the defendant had obtained it by fraud in that he had committed deliberate perjury and suppressed evidence. The learned Judges (Boddam and Moore, JJ.) there declare that the law in England has been authoritatively and finally laid down in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer and Co. (6) and Vadala v. Lawes (7) and that it is the same in India. With all deference, be it said, we doubt the completeness and finality even in England of these two cases. They are, of course, very high authorities; but in each of them, the judgment impeached was a foreign judgment, and foreign judgments unquestionably stand on a footing of their own. Priestman v. Thomas (8) and Cole v. Langford (9) are the only English cases we know of which at all support the appellant in respect of the judgments of our own Courts, and neither of these seems to us to be a very clear or very decided authority on the point now before us. In the former, there was an alleged collusive compromise followed by an order for Probate, and the case is relevant only in so far as it shows that Probate may be revoked on the ground that it was the result of a fraudulent compromise. Such a fraud would probably be within the meaning of the word as explained by Chief Justice Petheram in Mahomed Golab's case (1) and, moreover, the revocation of Probate is governed by a law of its own. And the judgment of Ridley and Phillimore, JJ., in Cole v. Langford (9) is a very bare pronouncement following Priestman v. Thomas (8).

On the other hand, the case of Patch v. Ward (10), which relates to an English judgment and was referred to and relied upon in Mahomed Golab's case (1), tends in the same direction as Flower v. Lloyd (2); while in Baker v. Wadsworth (11), Wright and Darling, JJ., were guided by the remarks of James and Thesiger L.JJ. in Flower v. Lloyd (2) and held that a judgment in an action would not be set aside on a subsequent action brought for that purpose on mere proof that the judgment was obtained by perjury or the fraud of the plaintiff in the former action.

Our conclusion is that the maxim interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium should prevail, and that the view taken by both the Courts below is sound and should be affirmed. If evidence not originally available comes to the knowledge of a litigant and he can show thereby that the evidence on which a decree against him was obtained, was perjured, his remedy lies in seeking a review of judgment but the rule of res judicata prevents him from re-agitating the matter on the same materials or on materials which might have been laid before the Court in the first instance. We may add that the present suit might apparently have been disposed of without the raising of the general question which we have been discussing; and this was indeed, pressed upon us on behalf of the respondents. For the plaintiff-appellant failed to adduce any evidence on the date fixed for the hearing, his application for an adjournment was refused, and his suit might have been dismissed for want of prosecution under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. But this course was not taken, and the application for an adjournment was thrown out on the same ground as the suit itself, namely, on the ground that no such suit was maintainable and, on the pleadings, further proceedings would be futile. That being so, we felt it incumbent upon us to deal with the important portion of law raised by the judgments of the Courts below.

The result, as we have already foreshadowed, is that this appeal must, in our opinion, fail, and it is dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 703-B OF 1910.

SHEORAM—RESPONDENT.

Occupancy-rights—Suit for possession of alienated land—Plaintiff not a registered occupant—Prayer for declaration not necessary—Berar Land Revenue Code, ss. 4, 15, 72, 73, 74, 76.

In a suit for possession of unalienated land in Berar, it is not a condition precedent for a decree for possession that the plaintiff should already be the registered occupant or that the decree should be accompanied by a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be the registered occupant.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 27th August 1910, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Akola, dated the 28th February 1910.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. Mittra and M. P. Walsh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The history of the case out of which this appeal arises is as follows:—

One Pama was the actual occupant in possession of the northern two-thirds share of field Survey No. 88 in Mouza Bagayit in the Murtizapur Taluk. Pama died in November 1905 and the defendant-appellant took possession of Pama's share of the field. The plaintiffs brought this suit for possession of the two-thirds share of the field on the ground that they were the nearest heirs to Pama The defendant pleaded that he was a nearer heir to Pama, and that Pama had made a Will in his favour, as regards the field in dispute. The Munsif held that the plaintiffs were nearer heirs than the defendant, but found the Will to be proved and valid, and he, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the plaintiffs were the nearer heirs and that the Will in favour of the defendant was not proved. The defendant-respondent raised a fresh argument before the District Judge, apparently based on the following passage in the judgment of the Munsif: "The present suit is, in effect, a suit to indirectly set aside the order made by the Revenue Authorities (vide Exhibit P-2) directing that the defendant should be entered as 'registered occupant' of the field—in the revenue papers—in place of Pama deceased. The Patwari reported the matter and asked for mutation of name in the 'khata' (vide Exhibit P-1). The entire proceedings of the Revenue Authorities (Exhibit P-2) show that plaintiffs were examined at the inquiry made in detail—that they laid their claim before the Tahsildar—and that defendant resisted it on the basis of the Will (Exhibit D-1) successfully. The khata was accordingly ordered to be transferred in defendant's name on 15th June 1906. Plaintiffs were thus unsuccessful there—and hence they now seek the only remedy left to them by contesting the claim once more in a Civil Court."

LAXMAN v. SHEORAM.

It is to be observed that these remarks are not based on the pleadings of either party, in which no reference whatever is made to the transfer of khata, except quite incidentally in one of the statements of the defendant's Pleader. There is no mention of the khata in the plaintiffs' pleadings. The plaintiffs are suing for possession, and even if the khata had been transferred in their name, this would not have obtained for them possession of the property, so that it is by no means accurate to say that this is a suit to set aside the order made by the Revenue Authorities. The result of the suit may possibly have that effect, but what the plaintiffs sue for is possession, as to which the Revenue Authorities have no jurisdiction, the land not being unoccupied land and the occupancy not having been forfeited under section 56 or otherwise and not having been relinquished. It was argued for the respondent before the District Judge that the plaintiffs cannot claim possession of the field without also claiming to have the field registered in their name. It was, it seems, argued that this consequence follows from the ruling in Baliram v. Maroti (1). The learned District Judge held that the ruling had no application, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession. The defendant appeals to this Court.

The 1st, 2nd and 4th grounds of appeal contest the findings of fact by the District Judge. No ground has been shown which would render those findings not binding on this Court, and these grounds of appeal fail. The remaining grounds raise the question of law argued before the District Judge, and it is contended for the appellant that the plaintiffs cannot get a decree for possession without adding a prayer for, and getting a decree for, a declaration that they are entitled to be the registered occupants. I agree with the learned District Judge that the ruling in Baliram v. Maroti (1) has no application in the present case. As the District Judge says:—"It refers to cases where the registered tenant has of his own free will surrendered the holding not generally but specially in favour of a particular person. There it is held that the acceptance by Government of the new tenant is in fact a re-grant. I do not think that this doctrine can be extended to the case where the registered tenant has died and the tenancy is continued to his heir. There is in such cases, I consider, no new grant but a continuance of the old grant." But, whether this view is correct or not, it seems to have no connection with the question whether in a suit for possession by a person who is not the registered occupant, he is bound to add a prayer to be declared entitled to be the registered occupant. The respondents in this Court do not wish to add such a prayer. I am not here concerned with the question whether the decree merely for possession is one which the Deputy Commissioner should consider a decree adjudging the decree-holder to be entitled to be the registered occupant. The sole question before me is whether the Court cannot give a decree for possession unless it also gives a decree declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to be the registered holder. It is a fact that cannot be disputed that the actual occupant and the registered occupant are very often different persons. Section 73 of the Code provides that the Deputy Commissioner shall, on the production of a decree adjudging a person to be entitled to be the registered occupant, recognise that person as the registered occupant, and section 74 provides that, save as provided in section 73, section 72 and certain other sections, the Deputy Commissioner is not bound to recognise any assignee as the registered occupant. But it does not seem to me to follow that the person not recognised as the registered occupant by the Deputy Commissioner cannot get possession under a decree for possession. A "registered occupant" means the person for the time being primarily responsible to the Government under the provisions of the Code for the payment of the revenue, vide section 4 (15), but the Code distinctly recognises in section 76 that persons other than the registered occupant may be interested in the occupancy, and I can find nothing in the Code making it necessary that the registered occupant must be the person in possession, and vice versa. The Code recognises co-occupants other than the registered occupant, and in this very case some one else other than the registered occupant is already in possession of one-third of the field. Whatever the ground on which a decree for possession is sought, I can find nothing to support the proposition that it is a condition of a decree for possession that the plaintiff should already be the registered occupant or that the decree should be accompanied by a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be the registered occupant.

For these reasons, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

[Consolidation of suits, when can be made—Inherent power of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Consent of parties—Revision—Material irregularity—Interference by High Court.

An order for consolidation of suits can be made in a proper case in the exercise of the inherent power of the Court, now recognized by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908.

Nehal Singh v. Alai Ahmed, 15 W. R. 110; Peacock v. Byjnath, 10 C. 58; Soorendro Pershad v. Nundun Misser, 21 W. R. 196 and In re SS. Falls of Ettrick, 22 C. 511, relied upon.

When many actions are oppressively and vexatiously brought by the same plaintiff for the purpose of trying the same question, the Court will interfere either by staying the proceedings or granting time to plead in all the actions, but only upon terms, or in some other way.

The Court ought not to consolidate actions commenced by the same plaintiff against different defendants unless the issues to be tried are precisely similar or the parties consent to such consolidation.

Leo v. Arthur, (1909) 100 L. T. 61, relied upon.

A Court consolidated a mortgage suit, a money suit and a partnership suit on the ground that the substantial parties were the same and some of the points raised were common to them and so it would be convenient to try them together, in that the evidence on the common points would be the same in all the suits. It appeared, however, that the substantial questions in controversy were not identical, and it was not likely that the questions in controversy between the parties in the money suit and in the mortgage suit could be covered by the decision in the partnership suit:

Held, that the order for consolidation ought not to have been made, that the Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and that irremediable mischief might be done if the High Court refused to interfere.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order whereby the Court below has directed the consolidation of two suits commenced by the petitioners along with a third suit wherein the petitioners are defendants. It appears that on the 26th May 1910, the petitioners sued to recover a sum of Rs. 15,924 on a hat-chita said to have been executed on the 16th May 1906. On the 23rd September 1910, they commenced another suit to recover a sum of Rs. 13,035 on a mortgage-bond alleged to have been executed in their favour on the 16th May 1906. In the interval, some of the defendants had commenced a suit against the petitioners on the 11th July 1910 for accounts of a partnership founded on an indenture executed on the 17th April 1907. The petitioners are not parties to this document; but the case for the opposite party is that they were really interested in the partnership transaction. During the pendency of these three suits, one Manadasundari Dassi applied to be added as a party defendant in the money suit and the mortgage suit and also as a plaintiff in the partnership suit. Her allegation was that on the 18th October 1910, that is after the commencement of these suits, she had acquired by purchase the interest of two of the infant defendants. The Court granted this application and allowed her to file written statement in the money and in the mortgage suits. She thereafter applied for consolidation of the three suits, and her allegation substantially was that the money advanced on the hat chita and on the mortgage-bond had been applied for the purpose of the partnership transaction. The petitioners opposed the application; but their objection was overruled and on the 11th November 1911, the Subordinate Judge made the order now under consideration. He has held that in these three suits, the substantial parties are the same, and some of the points raised, rightly or wrongly, are common to them, and, so it would be convenient to try them together, in that the evidence on the common points will be the same in all the suits. In support of the Rule, it has been contended, first, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order for consolidation, and secondly, that the grounds assigned do not justify the order in question.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, our attention has been drawn to rule 4 of Order XLV of the Code of 1908, which expressly provides for consolidation of suits for the purpose of pecuniary valuation of appeals to His Majesty in Council. It has been argued that the absence of a similar provision in relation to suits justifies the conclusion that the Legislature did not intend that suits should be consolidated except by consent of parties. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well founded. The history of the rule to which our attention has been invited is well known. Under the Code of 1882, there had been divergence of judicial opinion upon the question whether consolidation was permissible in case of appeals to His Majesty in Council. It had been held by the High Court of Allahabad, in In the matter of the petition of Khwaja Muhammad Yusuf (1), that such consolidation was permissible even though the suits had been disposed of by separate judgments. On the other hand, it had been held by this Court, in the cases of Royal Insurance Co. v. Akhoy Koomar (2); Moosti Muhammed Ubloolah v. Mootechund(3) and Byinath v. Graham(4), that such consolidation was not permissible except when the cases had been disposed of by one judgment. The rule in question was obviously introduced to settle this divergence of judicial opinion and it does not follow, as has been contended on behalf of the petitioners, that the absence of a similar rule in relation to suits indicates that the Legislature intended that no consolidation was allowable except by consent of parties. We are of opinion, therefore, that an order for consolidation can be made in a proper case in the exercise of the inherent power of the Court, now recognised by section 151 of the Code of 1908. This view is supported by the decisions in Nehal Singh v. Alii Ahmed (5); Peacock v. Byinath(6), where consolidation was allowed, and Soorendro Pershad v. Nundun Misser(7); In re S. S. Falls of Ettrick (8), where consolidation was refused.

In so far, however, as the second ground is concerned, we are of opinion that it is well founded. Rule 8 of Order XXXIX of the Rules of the Supreme Court of England indicates that the power of the Court to make an order for consolidation is not affected by anything contained in the rules of the Court, and that the principles applicable to cases of this description, as recognised by the Judicature Act, are to remain unaffected. These principles will be found formulated, in so far as Courts of Equity are concerned, in Daniell on Chancery Practice, Volume II, page 1610, and, in so far as Common Law Courts are concerned, in Chitty—Archbold—on Practice of the Queen's Bench Division (Volume I, page 407). The cases in England are not easy to reconcile, but the true rule appears to be that the Court will, where many actions are oppressively and vexatiously brought by the same plaintiff for the purpose of trying the same question, interfere either by staying the proceedings or giving time to plead in all the actions, but only upon terms, or in some other way, as the Courts have an unlimited power over their own process for the purpose of preventing the same being abused or made the instrument of oppression. The question was recently discussed by the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Lee v. Arthur (9). It was there pointed out that the Court will not consolidate actions commenced by the same plaintiff against different defendants unless the issues to be tried are precisely similar; the Court will, however, make an order of this description by consent of parties. Reference may in this connection be made to Seale v. Seale (10), where it was held that a partition action may be consolidated with an administration action and O'Gorman v. Harding (11), where an action by plaintiff on foot of a guarantee, and an action by the defendant to recover damages for breach of contract and for negligence in relation to an auction-sale, were held entirely distinct and disconnected in their subject-matter, and consolidation was refused. In the case before us, it is perfectly clear, as indeed appears on the face of the order of the Subordinate Judge, that the substantial questions in controversy are not identical. In the money suit and in the mortgage suit, the question raised is, whether the loan was advanced. In the partnership suit, the question is, who are the partners in the transaction and what are their respective rights and liabilities. It is significant that in the partnership suit, the plaintiff seeks to recover Rs. 2,189, whereas in the money suit and in the mortgage suit, considerable sums are claimed. It is not likely, therefore, that the question in controversy between the parties in the money suit and in the mortgage suit can be covered by the decision in the partnership suit. Even if it is established that the money advanced by the petitioners was applied for the purpose of the partnership transaction, it does not follow by any means that the plaintiffs may not be entitled to the relief they seek. On the other hand, it is fairly clear that the object of the opposite party is to tie up the money and the mortgage suits, which in ordinary course are likely to be heard and disposed of much sooner than the partnership suit. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the order for consolidation ought not to have been made. The Subordinate Judge has plainly acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and irremediable mischief might be done, if the Court refused to interfere at this stage [Charu Chandra v. Sarat Chandra Singh (12).]

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the Subordinate Judge discharged. The petitioners are entitled to their costs in this Court. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern Rule No. 6051 of 1911, which is accordingly made absolute; but there will be no separate order for costs in that Rule.

Rules made absolute.

Occupancy-rights—Presumption—Practice—Registered occupant, whether entitled to occupancy rights—Berar Land Revenue Code, ss. 4 (14) & (15), 61, 72, 105.

According to the Revenue law and practice in Berar, the "registered occupant" and the "actual occupant" may be different persons.

There is no presumption that the occupancy rights in unalienated land are held by the registered occupant until some other person is recognized as the registered occupant.

Nor is there a presumption that any person newly recognized as the registered occupant must necessarily be the owner of the rights of occupancy.

Baliram v. Maroti, 6 N. L. R. 78; 6 Ind. Cas. 824 distinguished.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 2nd September 1910, confirming that of the Junior Munsif, Akola, dated the 4th February 1909.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. P. Walsh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The case for the plaintiff-respondent, Hiralal, is that the field in suit, Survey No. 72 of Khanapur in the Akola District of Berar, belonged to Akaji; Akaji sold the field by an oral sale to the 1st defendant, Shivaji, about 35 years ago since which date Shivaji has been in possession; on the 23rd May 1907, Shivaji sold the field to the plaintiff by a registered sale deed, but when the plaintiff went to take possession, he was resisted by the appellants, the 2nd and 3rd defendants, Kisan and Mubarak, so the plaintiff has brought this suit for possession of the field. The case for the appellants, the 2nd and 3rd defendants, was that they know nothing of any sale by Akaji to Shivaji, that on Akaji's death, his son Ragho became owner and was in possession, and on the 15th of February 1906, Ragho sold the field to the appellants who thereupon lawfully entered into possession. They admit that Shivaji was in physical possession of the field for four or five years previous to the sale to them, but account for this by alleging that Shivaji was a bataidar under Ragho. The 1st defendant Shivaji supports the plaintiff. The appropriate issues were framed and the Munsif held on the evidence that Akaji had sold the field to Shivaji, that Shivaji entered into possession, and that Akaji's son Ragho had never been in possession and had in fact left the village a long time ago. On these findings, a decree for possession was given to the plaintiff. On appeal, the District Judge upheld the findings and dismissed the appeal. In 2nd appeal to this Court, the point was for the first time raised that Akaji was the recorded khatedar until 1892, and after his death, the khata was transferred to the name of his son Ragho. This point was apparently raised as tending to show that Akaji and his son had remained in possession and that Akaji had not sold the field to Shivaji. My learned predecessor, Skinner, A. J. C., remarked as follows in his judgment (Second Appeal No. 534 of 1909): "The Courts below have found the sale by Akaji to Shivaji proved, and that Ragho had, therefore, nothing left that he could convey to the appellants. But in arriving at this conclusion, they have failed to consider the presumptions arising from the facts that Akaji continued to be registered occupant of the field till his death, which occurred some time after 1892, and was succeeded as such by his son Ragho, or to require the plaintiff to explain why Shivaji, if he had really purchased the whole field, did not get it transferred to his name by razinama and kabuliyat. Under these circumstances, I am unable to accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court as one of fact binding on me, and must direct that the decree appealed against be set aside, and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision of the first appeal."

I would here observe that the reason why the plaintiff was never called upon to explain why Shivaji did not get the khata of the field transferred to his name, is that the 2nd and 3rd defendants in the lower Courts never raised the point; and they clearly never attached any importance to the question who was the registered occupant, since it appears from the evidence of the Patwari that in 1908 Ragho was still the registered occupant and the appellants had taken no steps whatever to get the khata transferred to their name.

After remand, the appellants called no evidence in support of the argument which had been raised on their behalf for the first time in this Court. But six witnesses were called for the plaintiff, namely, four Government officials with long experience of Berar, being a Deputy Commissioner, an Extra-Assistant Commissioner holding the post of a Sub-Divisional Officer, a Tahsildar, and the Patwari of Akola; the other two witnesses are Pleaders who are also land-holders in Berar. The first three witnesses depose that as a matter of practice the actual "occupant" of a survey number and the "registered occupant" are not necessarily the same persons, and they estimate that from 24 per cent. to 50 per cent. of registered occupants are not actual occupants and have no connection whatever with the survey number. They attribute this state of affairs to the fact that when a registered occupant dies, no notice is issued to the villagers in general before transferring the khata to the name of his heir [under section 72 (1) of the Berar Land Revenue Code], and that similarly no notice is issued when there is an application for transfer by razinamah and kabuliyat (under section 69 of the Land Revenue Code); but the main reason appears to be that it is not the duty of the Patel, or of any other Revenue officer, to report private transfers of unalienated land. The Patwari of Akola gives actual figures for the Revenue year 1909-10 showing that out of 73 fields transferred, in the case of 24 fields, the khatedar had ceased to have connection with the field, in other words that in 24 out of 73 cases the actual "occupant" and the "registered occupant" were different persons. It is not clear whether the 73 transfers are transfers of khata or private transfers of the fields, but in either case the figures have the same significance. The Sub-Divisional Officer and the Tahsildar depose that in cases of transfer of khata, no consideration is paid to the question who is the owner or actual occupant or man in possession of the field. The Deputy Commissioner says that in revenue practice the "registered occupant" and the "occupant" may be different persons and he justifies this practice by the two terms being separately defined in sub-sections (14) and (15) of section 4 of the Code. The Sub-Divisional Officer and the Deputy Commissioner both point out that while the "registered occupant" is the person to whom the Revenue Authorities first look to for the land revenue, and on default of payment by him, they look to the co-occupants, if any, and then to the person in actual occupation. This is in accordance with section 105 of the Code. The two Pleader witnesses are also holders of survey numbers in Berar. One of them deposes that he is the occupant of three survey numbers but not the registered occupant, that as regards another survey number, he purchased the occupancy right from the owner thereof, who was not the registered occupant, and got the registered occupant who was a different person and who had had no connection with the field for many years to relinquish the khata in his favour; and that as to six other survey numbers, he has sold his rights, but nevertheless the khatas still stand in his name. The remaining witness "owns", as he says, that is to say, he has acquired the occupancy-rights in 20 survey numbers, but nevertheless the khata in respect of 16 of them does not stand in his name. Both Pleaders, moreover, say that in their experience as Pleaders in the Berar Courts, they have come across many cases in which the registered khatedars have no connection with the fields standing in their names.

On the evidence summarized above, the learned District Judge has held that according to the revenue practice in Berar, no presumption is raised by the facts that the khata was not transferred from the name of Akaji to the name of Shivaji, and that on Akaji's death, it was transferred from the name of Akaji to the name of his heir Ragho to rebut the evidence that Akaji did sell the field to Shivaji, who has been in possession ever since, and who has been paying the land revenue. In other words, after taking into consideration the matters drawn to his attention by my learned predecessor, the learned District Judge has again held, after taking fresh evidence, that Ragho had nothing left that he could convey to the appellants. I am of opinion that the case was remanded by my learned predecessor in order to give the parties an opportunity of proving the existing custom or practice in Berar, and that he did not consider the question to be one of law, but rather one of custom or practice, for I think that he would have discussed the law, if he had considered the question to be one in which the law assisted the appellants. Considered as evidence of custom or practice, it would be impossible to find stronger or more convincing evidence as to the existing practice, and indeed no attempt has been made in the present appeal to this Court to contest the finding as to the existing practice. I accept the finding as to sale and possession which, in these circumstances, I consider to be binding on this Court.

But it is further stated in the memorandum of appeal that custom cannot override the law. No clear argument has, however, been advanced to show in what way the custom overrides the law, or what portion of the law contained in the Berar Land Revenue Code it overrides. No doubt, Chapter VI of the Code contemplates that the registered occupant of a survery number shall be the occupant or one of the co-occupants of the survey number, but there is no provision in the Code or in the rules under the Code, at any rate up to the date of the suit, which ensures that this shall be the case. No Record of Rights corrected from year to year is kept; it is not the duty of any Revenue official to record private transfers, nor is it the duty of persons who have acquired occupancy-rights to report that they have done so. Except in the case of unalienated land newly occupied under sections 58 and 60, where an agreement in the form given in Appendix XIII is taken from the person accepting the registered occupancy according to rule 119 of the rules under sections 58, 60 and 216 (1) (e), and from the successors of such person, there is nothing to restrict free alienation of his rights by the registered occupant (see form in Appeddix XVI), and in the absence of any provision for the maintenance of a Record of Rights, I do not see how the practice, which has been deposed to by the Revenue officials, can be said to be actually contrary to the law. My attention has been called to the ruling in Baliram v. Maroti (1), but I fail to see its relevancy. That ruling concerned the effect of a relinquishment by a registered occupant who, at the time of the relinquishment was the actual occupant or one of the co-occupants, and it cannot, so far as I can see, have any application to the case of a registered occupant who has long ago, as a matter of fact, parted with all his rights over the land. I may add that in over 13 years' experience of Berar as Judge and Judicial Commissioner, I have never before had it argued before me that the khatedar of a field must also necessarily be the owner of the occupancy-right, or vice versa. The fact that there is no presumption, such as has now been set up, has been admitted, though it has been deplored, and all the decisions in suits for possession have proceeded on the assumption that no such presumption arises. To hold otherwise now would not only be unjustified by anything on the record of this case, but would also be a complete reversal of the principles underlying the decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court for many years past. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

GOVINDA IYENGAR AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

RAGUNATHA DORAISINGAM alias GOWRI VALLABHA THEVAR, MINOR ZEMINDAR OF SIVAGANGA, THROUGH THE AGENT OF THE COURT OF WARDS, THE COLLECTOR OF RAMNAD—RESPONDENT.

Court of Wards Act (Mad. Act I of 1902), s. 63—Zemindar, Ward of Court—Ward, trustee of temple—Appointment by Court of Wards of manager to discharge trustee's duties—Suspension by manager of temple archakes—Liability of minor trustee for acts done by the manager.

A manager, appointed by the Court of Wards, under section 63 of Madras Act I of 1902, to discharge the duties of a temple trustee, for and on behalf of the minor ward, who is the trustee of the temple, is empowered to suspend or dismiss temple servants and archakas, who are bound to obey his orders.

A minor trustee is not liable for acts done by the officer appointed by the Court of Wards under the statutory authority conferred by section 63 of Madras Act I of 1902.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad, in A. S. No. 162 of 1910, presented against that of the Additional District Munsif of Paramakudi in O. S. No. 411 of 1908.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs sued for declaration that the order of their suspension by the manager of the defendant, the zemindar of Sivaganga, who was under the Court of Wards, was illegal, and that the defendant and his officers had no power to interfere with and pass orders with reference to the distribution of Tirtam (holy water), etc., by the plaintiffs, the hereditary stanigars of the plaint temple, and for damages, etc. The defendant maintained that the order of suspension was properly made because of the plaintiff's disobedience to carry out the Manager's orders about the distribution of Tirtam in a particular manner.

The District Munsif gave a decree to the plaintiffs declaring the order of suspension to be improper and setting it aside but refusing the other prayers of the plaintiffs.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the order of supension was not improper or unreasonable and dismissed the suit of plaintiffs.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Kunjuni Nair, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The manager is found by the Subordinate Judge to have been the person appointed by the Court of Wards under section 63 to discharge the duties of trustee or manager of the religious endowment during the minority of the wards. As temple servants, the plaintiffs were bound to obey the trustee and it was not for them to set up their judgment against that of the trustee. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in dismissing the suit. We may add that it does not appear how the defendant, the minor, could be made liable for what was done by the officer appointed by the Court of Wards under a statutory authority conferred by section 63 of the Madras Act I of 1902. The second appeal is dismissed with Costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A decree against a properly represented minor is binding upon him, but if he has not been properly represented, the decree is a nullity, and a claim brought to have it declared that the decree is a nullity is superfluous.

It being the pious duty of a Hindu son to pay his father's debt, not tainted with immorality, a sale for payment of such debt would bind the son and his interests in the ancestral property and would confer a complete title on the purchaser.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji (with him Mr. M. L. Agarwala), for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him Mr. Shafi-uz-zaman), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected Appeal No. 50 of 1911 arise out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for possession of shares in two villages, namely, Moman Khurd and Sabra, and for certain house property situated in the former village. They also claimed a declaration that a decree obtained by the defendant Chhedu Singh against their father Rudra Singh, on the 19th of July 1903, and the proceedings held in pursuance of that decree are not binding on them, and are as against them null and void. Chhedu Singh, defendant, is the nephew of the plaintiff's father, Rudra Singh, being the son of his brother, Umrao. Chhedu Singh brought a suit against Rudra Singh for partition of zemindari property situated in the two villages mentioned above and also of house property. To that suit the plaintiffs were added as defendants. A decree was passed in favour of Chhedu Singh, declaring him entitled to a half share of the property claimed and for partition of the house property and costs were also awarded to him. For the realization of those costs, the decree was put into execution and a great part of the property, now in dispute, was put up to sale and purchased by Chhedu Singh himself. Subsequently, he sold that property to the defendants, Beni Singh and Sri Ram. Decrees for rent were also obtained by Chhedu Singh against Rudra Singh, and in execution of those decrees, some property was sold and the defendant, Husain Ali Khan, purchased it. In 1907, the plaintiffs brought a suit against Chhedu Singh and the purchasers of the property, for a declaration that they were the owners of a five-sixths share in the property now in dispute, other than the shares in the village Subra; that the decree obtained by Chhedu Singh was fraudulent and not binding on them and that the sale of the property in execution of that decree could not affect their interests. This suit was dismissed on the 13th of January 1908, apparently under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, on the ground that the plaintiffs did not appear at the hearing and the defendants, who were represented, did not admit the claim. Subsequently, Rudra Singh died, and thereupon the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiffs. The main ground of the claim is that the plaintiffs were not properly represented in the suit brought by Chhedu Singh, and that the decree in that suit was not binding on them, and must be deemed to be null and void so far as they were concerned.

The Court below has held that as regards the five-sixths share claimed in the previous suit, the present suit is barred by the provision of Order IX, rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1903, which corresponds with section 103 of Act XIV of 1882. As regards the remainder of the property, it granted the plaintiffs a decree for a part of their claim. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is far from satisfactory, and it is not easy to follow all the reasoning by which it is supported. It is not, therefore, surprising that both the parties are dissatisfied with it and have appealed against the decree.

The plaintiffs in this appeal contend that the Court below is wrong in holding that a part of their claim is barred by reason of the dismissal of the suit brought by them in 1907. They urge that the cause of action for the present suit is not the same as the cause of action for the former suit, inasmuch as at the time when they brought that suit, they were in possession of the property, and that before the institution of the present suit, they were dispossessed from it.

If, as the plaintiffs contend, they were not properly represented in the suit brought by Chhedu Singh in 1901, the decree in that suit would, as against them, be a nullity. This was so held in Hanuman Pershad v. Muhammad Ishaq (1). If, on the other hand, the plaintiffs were substantial parties to the former suit and were properly represented in it by a guardian, the decree in that suit is binding on them; and, so long as it is not set aside, they would not be entitled to maintain the present claim. Therefore, the question whether the dismissal of the former suit operates as a bar to the present claim, would depend mainly on the determination of the further question whether in the former suit they were properly represented. If, as we have said above, they were not so represented, the decree as against them being a nullity, the claim for a declaration that it is a nullity is superfluous and the present suit would be unaffected by the fact that the former suit was dismissed.

It appears that in the suit brought by Chhedu Singh, Rudra Singh was at first impleaded as the sole defendant. He objected that his sons had an interest in the property, and thereupon the plaintiff, Chhedu Singh, made an application to the Court praying that the minor sons of Rudra Singh, under the guardianship of their father, Rudra Singh, be added as defendants. The application contains a further prayer that "permission might be granted" after verifying the affidavit which was filed along with the application. This apparently refers to the usual affidavit made in support of an application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem and the permission sought refers to such appointment. From the decree which is printed at page 7 of the respondent's book, it appears that the present plaintiffs, the sons of Rudra Singh, were added as defendants under an order, dated the 15th of April 1901. The learned Subordinate Judge holds that there is no evidence on the record to show that a formal order was made for the appointment of Rudra Singh as the guardian ad litem of his minor sons, the present plaintiffs. It is clear that an order was made upon the application referred to above granting it, but we may accept the finding of the Court below that no formal order was drawn up, appointing Rudra Singh as the guardian ad litem of the minors. It is, however, manifest from the fact that the application of Chhedu Singh, to which we have referred, was granted, that the Court sanctioned the prayer for the addition of the sons of Rudra Singh as defendants and for the appointment of Rudra Singh as their guardian ad litem. That being so, this case closely resembles the case of Musammat Bibi Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (2), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In that case also it did not appear that a formal order had been drawn up for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, but their Lordships held that the absence of a formal order was no more than a mere irregularity. Therefore, if the plaintiffs were substantially sued in the previous suit and were effectively represented in that suit by their father, with the sanction of Court, that would be sufficient to bind them. The suit brought by Chhedu Singh was contested by Rudra Singh, and it was after contest that a decree was passed. One of the grounds on which it is contended that the plaintiffs were not properly represented, and that their father, Rudra Singh, was not a fit person to be their guardian, is, that he was of unsound mind. The learned Subordinate Judge in the course of his judgment has remarked that Rudra Singh "was proved to be a half idiot." The only evidence on the record as to the mental capacity of Rudra Singh is the statement of a witness, Nathu Singh, who said that Rudra Singh was "somewhat crazy." The plaintiffs themselves in the suit brought by them in 1907, did not allege anything in respect of Rudra Singh's mental capacity beyond this that he was of weak intellect. There is a good deal of oral evidence adduced by the defendants which shows that Rudra Singh was in full possession of his intellect; and from the manner in which he defended the former suit, claiming as he did that the property in which Chhedu Singh asked for a big share, was his self-acquired property, and denying that it was joint ancestral property, shows that he was not a man incapable of properly defending the suit. The remarks of the learned Subordinate Judge seem to us to have no sufficient justification. We fail to see that the interests of the plaintiffs in that litigation were not properly safeguarded, and that they were not properly represented. Chhedu Singh was claiming a half share in the property on the allegation that it was joint ancestral property—an allegation which is now admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs. If it was correct, Chhedu Singh was entitled to the half share which he claimed, and the other half belonged to Rudra Singh and his sons, the present plaintiffs. Rudra Singh denied that the property was ancestral and that Chhedu Singh had a half share in it. There was, therefore, nothing in that litigation in regard to which the interests of the plaintiffs were overlooked and not provided. Rudra Singh's interests in that litigation were in no sense adverse to the interests of the plaintiffs, and from the nature of the defence set up by him, it is, as pointed above, clear that he was trying his best not only to guard his own interests but also those of his minor sons. We are, therefore, unable to hold that in the previous litigation the plaintiffs were in any way prejudiced or that they were not substantially represented. The decree in the previous suit was, therefore, binding on them; and so long as they could not on any other ground get it set aside, they could not avoid the operation of that decree.

In the suit which they brought in 1907 they alleged that the decree had been obtained fraudulently. The same allegation has been made in the present suit so far as that decree is concerned. So that the cause of action alleged in both suits in regard to the decree is the same. The Court below was, therefore, right in holding that the dismissal of the previous suit barred the present suit in so far as it related to the property which was the subject-matter of the claim in the suit of 1907. Furthermore as the decree in Chhedu Singh's suit was, in our opinion, binding on the plaintiffs, the auction sale held in execution of that decree is equally binding on him. Assuming, however, that the plaintiffs were not properly represented in the suit brought by Chhedu Singh, and that they are entitled to treat the decree in that suit as a nullity, the question would still arise whether the sale of the family property in execution of what must be deemed to be a decree against the father alone is binding on the plaintiffs and their interests in the family property. The learned Subordinate Judge in one part of his judgment says that it has not been proved that the property in question was the ancestral propertyof the plaintiffs. If we accept this finding, then the property could only be deemed to be the property of Rudra Singh; and having been sold in execution of a decree obtained against him, it passed the whole of his interest to the purchaser. It was, however, the plaintiffs' case and it was held in the suit of Chhedu Singh that property was ancestral property. Therefore, the property being ancestral, and it being the pious duty of the sons to pay their father's debts not tainted with immorality, a sale for payment of such debts would bind the sons and their interests in the ancestral property, and would confer a complete title on the purchaser. It is not the plaintiff's case that the decree obtained against Rudra Singh for costs of the partition suit was tainted with immorality. On the contrary, as we have pointed out above, he was defending the interests not only of himself but also of his sons; and, therefore, it is impossible to say that the decree passed in that suit was a decree for a debt which it was not the bounden duty of the plaintiffs as Hindu sons to discharge. As the property has been sold for the realization of that debt and it has been purchased by the defendant, the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any portion of that property from the purchasers. It is only on the ground of the debt being tainted with immorality that they could have claimed the property, but that is not their case; under these circumstances, no question of family necessity arises. From any point of view, therefore, the plaintiffs' claim cannot succeed, and the Court below was, in our opinion, wrong in decreeing any part of it. The result is that this appeal fails. It is dismissed with costs.

SHAKHI CHAND—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER
versus
RAM CHANDRA MARWARI—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARIY.

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Notice that tenant shall have to pay enhanced rent if he keeps premises in occupation, whether sufficient.

The plaintiff in this case let out a shop to the defendant on an oral lease from month to month at a monthly rent of Rs. 18-8. On September 4, 1910, the plaintiff served the defendant with a notice in the following terms: "In respect of the shop, some persons offer Rs. 27 a month; you are, therefore, informed by this notice that if from the 1st Asuin 1318, you want to keep the shop in lease, you shall have to pay Rs. 27 a month." The defendant continued in occupation but refused to pay the enhanced rent. Subsequently, on the 2nd December 1910, the plaintiff served the defendant with a notice calling upon him to pay rent at the enhanced rate for three months and at the same time requiring him to quit on the 16th December 1910:

Held, that the first notice was not sufficient to terminate the tenancy or to enhance the rent.

Rule against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Bhagalpore, dated February, 3rd 1912.

Babu Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Babu Lachmi Narain Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to modify the decree in a suit for enhancement of rent. The case for the petitioner, who was the plaintiff in the Court below, is that he let out three shops and two almirahs to the defendant on an oral lease from month to month. The rent settled was Rs. 10-8 for the shops and Rs. 8 for the almirahs. On the 4th September 1910, the plaintiff served a notice upon the defendant in the following terms: "Whereas two almirahs and three shops are in your tenancy and the rent for the same has been paid up to Bhadro 1317, and as in respect of this, some persons offer Rs. 27 a month, you are, therefore, informed by this notice that if from the 1st Aswin 1318 you want to keep the shops and the almirahs in lease, you shall have to pay Rs. 27 a month." The defendant continued in occupation but refused to pay rent at the enhanced rate. Subsequently, on the 2nd December 1910, the plaintiff served a notice upon the defendant calling upon him to pay rent at the enhanced rate for three months and at the same time requiring him to quit on the 16th December 1910. On the 14th November 1911, the plaintiff commenced the present action and claimed rent at the higher rate. The Small Cause Court Judge has made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for rent at the original rent and has deducted therefrom a certain sum alleged to have been spent by the defendant in effecting necessary repairs on the property. Two questions, therefore, require consideration; namely, first, whether the rent was validly enhanced; and secondly, whether the defendant is entitled to claim any deduction on account of the costs of repairs.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, it is reasonably plain that the first notice was not sufficient either to terminate the tenancy or to enhance the rent. The case falls within the principle of the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bradley v. Atkinson (1). In that case, the landlord served a notice upon the tenant in the following terms: "If the rooms you occupy in the house are not vacated within a month from this date, I will file a suit against you for ejectment, as well as for recovery of rent due at the enhanced rate." It was held that the letter was not such a notice to quit as the law requires, inasmuch as it was not a notice of the intention of the lessor to terminate the contract at the end of a month of the tenancy. Mr. Justice Straight further doubted whether the letter was a notice to quit at all. We are not unmindful that in England it has been held that if a definite notice to quit is given, it is not invalidated by the addition of words requiring, in a notice by the landlord, an increase, or in a notice by the tenant, a diminution, of rent, if the tenant stays on, and that a notice so expressed operates as a notice to quit with an offer to grant or to take a new tenancy; as the case may be. Thus, it was laid down by the majority of the Court of Appeal in Ahearn v. Bellman (2) that although a notice to quit must be clear and certain so as to bind the party who gives it and to enable the party to whom it is given to act upon it at the time he receives it, it cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule of law that the notices to be given must not be optional. In the case before the Court of Appeal, the notice was in these terms: "I hereby give you notice to quit and deliver up possession of the shop premises and show-rooms now held by you as tenant from me, on or before the first day of May 1878; and I hereby further give you notice that should you retain possession of the premises after the date before mentioned, the annual rental of the premises now held by you from me will be £160 payable quarterly in advance." It is obvious that the first part of the notice was sufficiently precise to terminate the tenancy. The second part merely gave the tenant the option of a new contract of tenancy. [Doe v. Jackson (3), Doe d. Lyster v. Goldwin (4); Roberts v. Hayward (5); Bury v. Thompson (6)]. In two analogous cases in this country, the rule in question has been followed. [Kikabhai v. Kalu Ghela (7) and Adolph Sharager v. Emma Price (8)]. In our opinion, the present case falls rather within the principle of the decision in Bradley v. Atkinson (1) than within the rule laid down by the Court of Appeal in Ahearn v. Bellman (2). The inference follows that the tenancy was not terminated and the notice did not operate to enhance the original rent. The first ground, therefore, fails.

(1) 7 A. 899.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, section 108, clause (6), of the Transfer of Property Act provides that if the lessor neglects to make, within a reasonable time after notice, any repairs which he is bound to make to the property, the lessee may make the same himself and deduct the expense of such repairs with interest from the rent or otherwise recover it from lessor. In the case before us, the defendant asserted in his written statement that the landlord was liable to effect the repairs after notice had been given to him for the purpose, and that after his failure, the tenant had, to his knowledge, effected the repairs himself. This allegation does not appear to have been challenged at the trial, and no evidence was adduced on behalf of the landlord to show under what circumstances the repairs were effected. It further appears from the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge that the question was not raised before him in the shape in which it has been presented to us. In view of these facts, we are of opinion that sufficient ground has not been made out to justify our interference in revision. The second ground, therefore, fails.

The result is that this Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

KALLA v. HARGIAN.

JUDGMENT.—On the 29th of January 1909, Hargian, Bhogi Ram, Paran Sukh and Khachera executed a mortgage with possession in favour of Manik to secure a sum of Rs. 1,500. The entire property mortgaged was 26 bighas, 5 biswas. The share of Hargian in that was 4 bighas, 18 biswas, that of Bhogi Ram, 1 bigha, 12 biswas, and the remaining 19 bighas, 15 biswas, belonged to Paran Sukh and Khachera. The mortgagors undertook a liability joint as well as several to pay the mortgage-debt. On the same day Hargian, executed a deed by way of Mashrut-ul-rehan (a further charge) in favour of Manik, in which he mortgaged his own share amounting to 4 bighas, 18 biswas, for a sum of Rs. 99. In this separate deed by way of Mashrut-ul-rehan, he stipulated that at the time of redeeming the mortgage executed jointly by him and three other persons, he would pay the money due under this separate deed. There is a recital in the mortgage-deed that a sum of Rs. 150 was due by Hargian to Kalla and others. The plaintiffs then brought a suit for the pre-mortgage of the share of Hargian under the mortgage-deed dated the 29th of January 1909, executed by four persons already mentioned. The plaintiffs in their plaint alleged that the share of Hargian in the mortgage-debt was only a sum of Rs. 153, out of which the plaintiffs were, according to the recital in the deed, entitled to a sum of Rs. 150, and that, therefore, they were entitled to pre-mortgage on payment of Rs. 3. The Court of first instance decreed the claim, and the decree of that Court was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court except as to costs. That Court directed that the plaintiffs, in order to succeed in their suit, were bound to pay a sum of Rs. 356-8, over and above the sum of Rs. 150, which was due upon their own mortgage. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court, and it is contended by their learned Vakil that the transaction by way of Mashrut-ul-rehan being a separate and independent transaction, the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-mortgage the prior transaction alone, and that the mode adopted by the Courts below of determining the amount which the plaintiffs are bound to pay under the mortgage is wrong. Both these pleas, in our opinion, are well founded. We have no doubt that the mortgage of 29th January 1909, is a transaction quite separate from the transaction evidenced by the deed of Mashrut-ul-rehan of the same date. The mortgagors under the mortgage are four persons, and every one of them has undertaken a liability joint and several. The mortgaged property is 26 bighas, 5 biswas. The mortgage is a mortgage with possession. In the deed of Mashrut-ul-rehan, Hargian only is the mortgagor. The mortgaged property is his share only, amounting to 4 bighas, 18 biswas. The consideration for the Mashrut-ul-rehan is quite distinct from the consideration for the joint mortgage. The mortgage under the Mashrut-ul-rehan is, strictly speaking, a simple mortgage, while the mortgage under the deed executed by Hargian and the three others, is a usufructuary mortgage. That being so, the plaintiffs in their suit for pre-mortgage are not liable to pay the sum of Rs. 99, secured by the Mashrut-ul-rehan deed. The share of Hargian in the property mortgaged by him along with three other persons, is 4 bighas, 18 biswas, and the entire sum of Rs. 1,500 is a charge upon the entire property amounting to 26 bighas, 5 biswas. The charge on the share of Hargian is, therefore, in the proportion of the value of 4 bighas, 18 biswas, to the value of 26 bighas, 5 biswas. We are supported in this view by the ruling of this Court in Sita Ram v. Nand Ram (1). As the lower Appellate Court has not come to any finding regarding the value of the share of Hargian and the value of the entire property mortgaged on the 29th of January 1909, we refer the following issue to that Court for a finding:—What are the proportionate values of the share of Hargian and of the entire mortgaged property? The Court will be at liberty to take such additional evidence as the parties may adduce. Ten days will be allowed for objections on return of the finding.

Issue remitted.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B.C. of 1884*) s.* 85, cl. (a) —Assessment—Naib residing in zemindar's house adjoining kacheri without paying rent—Zemindar occupier and liable to tax, not naib—House and kacheri, separate holdings.

The plaintiff as the naib of a zemindar occupied a small house adjoining the zemindar's kacheri, and paid no rent. The Municipality assessed him with Municipal taxes under section 85 clause (a) of the Bengal Municipal Act whereupon he brought this suit for a declaration that the imposition of the taxes is illegal:

Held, that the occupier of the house was the zemindar, and that he, and not the plaintiff, was liable to be taxed in respect of it.

Obiter dictum:—The plaintiff's house and the kacheri house were not one holding for the purposes of the assessment under section 85 clause (a) of the Bengal Municipal Act.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 20th July 1904, reversing that of the first Munsif, Bajitpur, dated the 6th July 1903.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakravarty, for the Appellant.

Babu Gobinda Chandra De Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises is one brought to have it declared that the Municipal tax imposed on a certain building is illegal and also for a refund of the amount realized from the plaintiff as municipal and latrine taxes.

The facts of the case are these. The plaintiff is the naib of the Maharaja of Mymensingh, and, as such, occupies a small house adjoining, the kacheri of the Maharaja. The Municipality have assessed him with municipal taxes on the ground that the house in which he resides and its site form a separate holding from the kacheri house belonging to the Maharaja, on which a separate assessment has been made.

The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion, first, that the house occupied by the plaintiff and the kacheri house are one holding, and secondly, that the plaintiff is not the occupier of the house in which he resides within the meaning of section 85 of the Municipal Act, but that the occupier is the Maharaja of Mymensinh. For these reasons, he has given the plaintiff a decree.

The Chairman of the Bajitpur Municipality now appeals to this Court and contends that the Subordinate Judge is wrong on both points.

In support of his contention that the Subordinate Judge is wrong on the first point, he calls our attention to clause (3) of section 6 of the Municipal Act, in which the term "holding" is defined, and in which it is also said that "provided that where two or more adjoining holdings form part and parcel of the site or premises of a dwelling-house, manufactory, warehouse, or place of trade or business, such holdings shall be deemed to be one holding for the purposes of this Act other than those mentioned in clause (a) of section eighty-five," Now, it is pointed out that the assessment which is disputed in this suit has been made under clause (a) of section 85, and that, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge, in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff's house and the kacheri house of the Maharaja are one holding, has fallen into a mistake. They may be one holding for purposes other than those mentioned in clause (a) of section 85; but they are not one holding for the purposes of the assessment which has been made in this suit.

We think that this contention has considerable force. But it is unnecessary for us to come to any definite finding on this point, because we think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the second point, which is impugned on this appeal, is right. The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff is not the occupier of the house in question, because he is only the naib of the Maharaja and is residing in it in his capacity of servant of the Maharaja. He does not pay any rent for the house and is not a permanent occupier but can be removed at the Maharaja's pleasure. We, therefore, think that the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the occupier of the house is the Maharaja, and not the plaintiff. That being so, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, in our opinion, upon the whole is right; and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

SURENDRA NATH ROY CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT DEBTORS—PETITIONERS
GIRIJA NATH ROY CHOUDHURY AND OTHERS—DECREE HOLDERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Decree—Amendment—Suit dismissed on preliminary point—Appeal—Judgment of first Court set aside and appeal allowed "with costs"—Meaning of "costs"—Costs of appeal only—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 13—Court-fee on memorandum of appeal to be refunded to appellant and not charged upon respondent.

A suit was dismissed on a preliminary ground by the first Court. Upon appeal, the High Court, in 1903, reversed that decision with costs. In the decree which was prepared in the High Court it was directed that the respondents in the appeal do pay the costs of the appeal and the costs incurred in the first Court, and in the schedule of costs, incurred in the High Court by the appellant, an item of Rs. 285, on account of Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal, was entered. On an application made in 1910 for amendment of the decree:

Held, that an order ought to have been made under section 13 of the Court Fees Act for refund of the fee paid on the memorandum of appeal, and that the amount ought not to have been entered in the decree so as to throw an unnecessary burden upon the unsuccessful respondent, and that such an order should now be made:

Held, also, that allowing an appeal with costs means the costs of the High Court only, and that that portion of the decree which directed the then respondents, to pay the costs of the then appellants in the Court of first instance should be omitted.

Rule obtained upon an application for the amendment of a decree made in the High Court on August 13th, 1903.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Amarendra Nath Rose and Delendra Narain Bhattacharya, for the Petitioners.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chuckravarty, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule for amendment of the decree of this Court in Girija Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Surendra Nath Roy Chowdhury (1). It has been contended, in the first place, that an order ought to have been made under section 13 of the Court-Fees Act for refund of the fee paid on the memorandum of appeal, to the then successful appellants and that the amount ought not to have been entered in the decree so as to throw an unnecessary burden upon the unsuccessful respondants. This contention is obviously just. We, therefore, now make an order under section 13 of the Court-Fees Act and direct that Rs. 285 which was paid on account of Court-fees on the memorandum of appeal to this Court by the plaintiffs-appellants be refunded to them. The decree of this Court will be amended by the omission of this sum.

It has been contended, in the second place, on behalf of the petitioners that the decree ought not to have contained a direction for payment of the costs of the Court below by the defendants to the plaintiffs. It appears that the suit had been dismissed on a preliminary ground, namely, that it had been improperly framed. Upon appeal, that decision was reversed, and the order of the Court was that the appeal be allowed with costs; that clearly means the costs of the High Court. It has been suggested, however, that the learned Judges intended to allow the then plaintiffs the costs of the original Court as well; such an interpretation is, in our opinion, entirely inadmissible. The learned Judges could not have intended to allow to the then appellants the costs of the original Court inclusive of the Cour-fees paid on the plaint, irrespective of the manner in which the suit might ultimately terminate. We must, therefore, allow this objection also and direct that the decree be amended by the omission of that portion of it which directs the then respondents to pay the costs of the plaintiffs-appellants in the Court of first instance.

There will be no order as to the costs of this Rule.

Rule made absolute: Decree amended.

Malikana, suit for—Calculation of malikana—Burden of proof—Previous litigation between parties—Decision on mixed question of fact and law, binding though erroneous—Res judicata—Interest on arrears of malikana—Damage for wrongful detention of money—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 115—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 90—Decree, personal, when to be made.

In a suit for recovery of a sum of money claimed as malikana, the burden lies upon the plaintiff in the first instance to prove the amount of the net assets of the estate, with reference to which malikana is to be calculated. The burden is discharged on the production by the plaintiff of a judgment in a previous litigation between the parties in which it was determined that the net assets amounted approximately to a certain sum. The onus then shifts to the defendant to establish that since the date of the decision in question, the condition of the property had deteriorated and that the assets at the present time are smaller than at the time of the previous litigation.

In a previous litigation between the parties, it was decided that the defendants were not entitled to deduct the Government revenue and the cesses but only the collection charges from the gross income of the estate in order to determine the net assets upon which malikana was to be calculated:

Held, that this being a mixed question of fact and law, the decision upon it, though erroneous, was binding upon the parties and their successors.

Aghore Nath Mukerjee v. Kamini Debi, 11 C. L. J. 461; 6 Ind. Cas. 554, followed.

Although interest on arrears of malikana cannot be claimed under the provisions of the Interest Act, because the sum which the plaintiff seeks to recover is not due under a written instrument, nor has there been a demand of payment in writing, yet it is open to the Court to make a decree for damages for wrongful detention of the plaintiff's money.

Lala Chhajmal Das v. Brijbhukhan Lal, 22 I A. 199; 17 A. 511; Jogeshur Bhagat v. Ghanasham Das, 5 C. W. N. 356; Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand, 10 A. 85; Cook v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 27, 43 L. J. Ch. 855; Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh, 19 C. 19 and Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh, 24 C. 699, 1 C. W. N. 437, relied upon.

The limitation applicable to a claim for damages is that provided by Article 115, of the Limitation Act, and the plaintiffs are entitled to damages upon each annual sum in arrear only for three years antecedent to the suit.

Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand, 10 A. 85, Sri Niwas Ram Pande v. Udit Narain Misr, 13 A. 330, Badibibi v. Sami Pillai, 2 M. L. J. 235, Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh, 19 C. 19 and Moti Singh v. Ramshari Singh, 24 C. 699; 1 C. W. 437, relied upon.

A decree, under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, can only be made after it has been found upon the sale of the hypothecated properties that the judgment-debt has not been satisfied thereby. Till that stage is reached, no question of a personal liability arises.

Therefore, at the preliminary stage of the suit, no personal decree can be made in favour of the plaintiff in addition to the decree for sale of the hypothecated properties.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 6th July 1908.

Moulvi Muhammad Mustafa Khan and Babu Ganesh Dut Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the decree in a suit for recovery of a sum of money claimed as malikana. The Court below has found that the defendants are liable to pay the malikana to the plaintiff and the question of their liability has not been raised in this Court. But the decision of the District Judge has been assailed on four grounds; namely, first, that the amount of the net assets has been fixed at too high a figure; secondly, that the Government revenue and the cesses should have been deducted from the assets before the malikana was calculated; thirdly, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any sum by way of interest, and, fourthly, that the decree as drawn up is not in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

In support of the first point urged on behalf of the appellants, it has been contended that the burden was upon the plaintiffs to establish the amount of assets with reference to which malikana had to be calculated, that they have not discharged such onus and that the defendants have at any rate shown that the income is much less than has been adopted by the District Judge as the foundation of his judgment. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. No doubt the burden lay upon the plaintiffs in the first instance to prove the amount of the net assets of the estate. But they discharged that burden when they produced the judgment in the previous litigation between the parties in which it had been determined that the net assets amounted approximately to Rs. 4,000 a year. The onus then shifted upon the defendants to establish that since the date of the decision in question the condition of the property had deteriorated and that the assets at the present time were smaller than the assets at the time of the previous litigation between the parties. But the learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that the previous decisions are valueless, as they were based upon teikhana papers It is not open, however, to the appellant to impeach the correctness of the decision in the earlier litigation between the parties. It must be taken, therefore, that at that time the income of the property was approximately Rs. 4,000 a year. The question next arises whether the defendants have discharged the burden which lay upon them to rebut the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs. No doubt they have produced the survey record which shows that the amount of rent recoverable from the cultivating raiyats is Rs. 3,242 a year. This, however, is by no means conclusive. It appears that there are zerait lands within the estate and that income is derived also from other sources. A Patwari was placed in the witness-box who swore what the income was as derived from those sources. But he admitted that there were collection papers which were not produced. We are not prepared to place implicit reliance upon the figures given by the Patwari; and, in the absence of the collection papers, which admittedly existed but were withheld for some unexplained reason, the defendants have not been able to rebut the evidence produced by the plaintiffs. The conclusion, therefore, follows that the decision of the District Judge upon this part of the case cannot be successfully attacked.

In so far as the second point urged by the appellants is concerned, it has been argued that in order to determine the net assets upon which malikana is to be calculated, the Government revenue and the assets should be deducted from the gross income in addition to the collection charges. Here, however, the appellants are in a difficulty. In a previous litigation in 1894, this very question was raised, and it was then decided that the defendants were not entitled to deduct the Government revenue and the cesses from the gross income of the estate. But the learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that the decision was erroneous in law and does not, therefore, operate as res judicata. It is fairly clear, however, that even if the decision be assumed to have been erroneous in law, it was a decision upon a mixed question of fact and law and is, consequently, binding as between the parties and their representatives-in-interest. In that litigation a parwana was produced under which in 1788 the malikana had been granted. The Subordinate Judge held that the effect of this parwana was to show that the plaintiffs were entitled to malikana at the rate of 10 per cent. on the produce of the villages; and upon the construction of the parwana in the light of the provisions of the Regulations, the Subordinate Judge held that the defendants were entitled to deduct nothing beyond the collection charges from the gross proceeds. The decision, therefore, in substance related to the effect of the parwana as regulating the rights and liabilities of the parties. It is obvious that this is a decision on a mixed question of fact and law; and it cannot be disputed that the decision of such a question, even though erroneous, is binding upon the parties and their successors. In support of this proposition, we need only refer to the case of Aghore Nath Mukerjee v. Kamini Debi (1). The second contentions of the appellants, therefore, fails.

In so far as the third ground urged by the learned Vakil for the appellants is concerned, it has been argued that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any sum by way of interest on the arrears of malikana due. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the case of Kallar Roy v. Ganga Pershad Singh (2). No doubt, that case is an authority for the proposition that interest cannot be claimed under the provisions of the Interest Act because the sum which the plaintiff seeks to recover is not due under a written instrument; nor has there been a demand of payment in writing. Consequently, the plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefit of section 1 of Act XXXII of 1839. It does not follow, however, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any sum by way of damages for the detention of the money due to them. It was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Lala Chhajmal Das v. Brijbhukhan Lal (3), which was followed by this Court in the case of Jogeshur Bhagat v. Ghanasham Dass (4), that even though the claim of the plaintiffs is limited to interest which is not recoverable either under a contract or under the provisions of the Interest Act, it is open to the Court to make a decree for damages for wrongful detention of their money. It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to claim damages in lieu of interest. In support of this view, it is sufficient to refer to the case of Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (5), where the learned Judges relied upon the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Cook v. Fowler (6) and upon the notes to the case of Mounson v. Redshow (Notes to Saunder's Reports Vol. I) (7). The same view has been adopted by this Court in the cases of Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (8) and Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (9). But here a question of some nicety arises. If the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any sum by way of interest, is not their claim for damages for twelve years barred in part at least by the law of limitation? The learned Vakil for the respondent has suggested that damages should be treated as merely accessory to the principal amount due and that they should be treated as charged upon immoveable property in the same manner as the sum due on account of the malikana. In our opinion, this contention is fallacious. The plaintiffs become entitled to damages on the ground that the sum payable to them as malikana has been illegally withheld. The cause of action is entirely different from the cause of action for the recovery of malikana. Consequently, it cannot be suggested that the same rule of limitation must necessarily apply to the claim for recovery of the two sums. In fact, it has been ruled in a series of decisions in this Court, as well as in Allahabad and Madras, amongst which we may mention Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (5), Sri Niwas Ram Pande v. Udit Narain Misr (10), Badibibi v. Sami Pillai (11), Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (8) and Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (9), that in cases of this description, the limitation applicable is that provided in Article 115 or Article 116 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act. We are not unmindful that, in the peculiar circumstances of the case of Jogeshur Bhagat v. Ghanasham Das (4), Article 120 was held applicable. But that was a case in which the original sum was recoverable under a registered contract and, consequently, it was immaterial whether Article 116 or Article 120 was applied. In the case before us, we are clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to damages upon each annual sum in arrear only for three years antecedent to the suit. We may add that in the case of Lala Chhajmal Das v. Brijbhukan Lal (3), where damages were allowed in lieu of interest, the question of limitation was neither raised nor considered, apparently because the appeal was argued ex parte. The third ground taken by the appellants must consequently prevail in part.

(1) 11 C. L. J. 461; 6 Ind. Cas. 554.

In so far as the fourth ground urged by the appellant is concerned, it has been contended that the decree has not been properly drawn up, and that at this preliminary stage of the suit, no personal decree can be made in favour of the plaintiffs in addition to the decree for sale of the hypothecated properties. There is no room for controversy that this contention is well founded. A decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act can be made only after it has been found upon the sale of the hypothecated properties that the judgment-debt has not been satisfied thereby. Till that stage is reached, no question of a personal liability arises. We may point out that the question is not one of form but of substance, because so far as the claim for recovery of money charged upon immoveable property is concerned, the rule of limitation is that provided in Article 132 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act,

(3) 22 I. A. 199: 17 I. A. 511.
(4) 5 C. W. N. 356.

(11) 2 M. L. J. 235.

whereas in respect of the claim for the enforcement of a personal remedy, a shorter period of limitation is applicable. The fourth ground, therefore, must prevail.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the District Judge modified. The amount due must be determined on the principle here explained and the plaintiffs will have a decree for the principal amount claimed together with interest on such sum for not more than three years before the suit; and the clause in the decree which allows a personal decree in favour of the plaintiffs will be expunged. Upon the sum ascertained to be due on this principle to the plaintiffs at the date of the commencement of the suit, interest will run at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum up to the date of this judgment and thereafter at the rate of 6 per cent As the victory has been a divided one, there will be no order for costs either in this Court or in the Court below.

Appeal allowed in part; Decree modified.

COURT OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER, PUNJAB.

REVENUE APPEAL No. 29 OF 1911-12.

Musammat NIHAL DEVI—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

versus

KISHORE CHAND AND ANOTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), s. 144—Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 17—Appraisement—Value of Record of Rights entries in revenue proceedings.

Under the joint force of section 17 of Act XVI of 1887 and section 144 of Act XVII of 1887, a co-sharer in a joint holding is competent to make an application for appraisement; it is not necessary for all the co-sharers to join in it.

In dealing with applications under sections 144, Land Revenue Act, XVII of 1887, and 17 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, XVI of 1887, the Revenue Officer should not go behind the entries in the Revenue Records. He should act as if the co-sharers recorded therein were in fact the co-sharers in the holding. A procedure is provided for those who dispute the correctness of the Record of Rights entries to have them altered. Pending alterations, the Revenue Officer should, in a proceeding under section 17, Tenancy Act, treat the entries as correct.

Appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Jullundur, dated 16th August 1910, reversing that of the Collector of Ferozepore, dated 25th May, 1911.

FACTS.—This was an application for appraisement of produce of lands of 32 villages in the Ferozepore District. The Collector ordered that the applicant should pay in Rs. 392 and arbitrators and establishment be appointed to work and apportion the shares of produce. On appeal to the Commissioner, the Collector's order was reversed.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the order appealed against, the Commissioner (Mr. Sykes) says that the original application of Musammat Nihal Devi for appraisement of produce under the Tenancy Act ought to have been rejected by the Collector because section 17 of the Tenancy Act does not apply to disputes between co-sharers. In saying this, the Commissioner overlooked the provisions of section 144 of the Land Revenue Act which make applicable the provisions of the Tenancy Act to disputes between co-sharers. The learned Commissioner also took exception to the Collector's order because all the landlords had not joined in the application. As in the case of a dispute between co-sharers, no question of landlord arises, the Commissioner should not have been influenced by this consideration. Finally the Commissioner was of opinion that Musammat Nihal Devi had lost her title by virtue of the Chief Court judgment in Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand (1). I must say that I am unable, on a cursory perusal of that judgment, to take the same view of it as the Commissioner does. That judgment seems to me to amount to a ruling that a suit for possession of certain partnership property on a settlement of an account was barred by limitation, but there is a distinct finding that Musammat Nihal Devi is her husband's heir. Whether she is entitled to obtain possession of her husband's property in a suit brought by her as heir and not as co-partner, or whether, if already in possession, she is entitled to retain possession, are questions which do not appear to me to have been decided by the Chief Court ruling referred to. I must say that I regard the position of Musammat Nihal Devi a very strong one in view of the provisions of sections 88 and 90 of the Indian Trusts Act of 1882. However, without going into the question of title, I must hold that in dealing with applications under section 144, Land Revenue Act, and section 17, Tenancy Act, the Revenue Officer should not go behind the entries in the Revenue Records. He should act as if the co-sharers therein recorded were in fact the co-sharers in the holding. A procedure is provided for those who dispute the correctness of the Record of Rights entries to have the entries altered. Pending alteration, the Revenue Officer's proceeding under section 17, Tenancy Act, should treat the entries as correct. As the harvest in respect of which the original application was made is long past and the appellant desires nothing more than the correction of the Commissioner's error in law and a pronouncement as to the correct procedure to be observed in such cases in future, no order is necessary beyond the acceptance of the appeal. I decree, however, costs of the appeal in favour of appellant against respondents.

CIVIL REVISION No. 193 OF 1911.

March 20, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Shaw, J. C.

NGA PO GYI AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

versus

MI ON—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 26, 57—Contract by husband to live with wife, to support her, and not take another wife—Breach of contract—Damages—Legal and illegal parts separable—Contract enforceable.

On a wife taking steps to divorce her husband, the latter agreed to live in her house, to work and support her, and not to take a lesser wife, but did not carry out the agreement in all three particulars. On these facts she sued him for damages for breach of contract:

Held, (1) that the suit was maintainable despite the subsistence of defendant's marriage with plaintiff;

(2) that a stipulation not to take a lesser wife was not contrary to the Buddhist law, and, therefore, did not contravene section 23 of the Contract Act;

(3) that, though the stipulation not to take a lesser wife may have been illegal as being in contravention of section 26 of the Contract Act, yet the promises to live in plaintiff's house and to work and support her, were good and lawful and, therefore, enforceable under section 57 of the Contract Act.

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Applicants.

Mr. Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff-respondent sued for Rs. 100 as compensation for breach of contract. The plaintiff-respondent and the defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, are wife and husband. Defendant-applicant, Nga Ton, is Po Gyi's father.

The alleged contract was one whereby defendants-applicants undertook to pay Rs. 100 damages to plaintiff-respondent, if defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, failed to live in her house and work and support her, and took a lesser wife.

The Courts below both found in favour of the plaintiff-respondent, and my predecessor having decided that no second appeal lay, the case now comes before me as one for revision.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants-applicants that the promise was illegal because there was no consideration, that a Burmese Buddhist wife cannot maintain a suit for damages against her husband while the marriage subsists, that if taking a lesser wife meant forming an illicit union, the contract would be immoral and opposed to public policy, and that if taking a lesser wife meant making a legal marriage, the contract was in contravention of section 26, Contract Act.

The plaintiff's allegations were that defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, did not work or support her, but deserted her and, she understood, was looking about for a lesser wife, whereupon she took steps to divorce him, but refrained from persisting in a claim for divorce on defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, undertaking to live in her house and work and support her and not take a lesser wife, and on the defendant-applicant, Nga Ton, his father, guaranteeing the performance of his promise or standing security for him, and that defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, thereafter broke his promise in every way. Clearly there was good consideration, namely, plaintiff-respondent refraining from suing for divorce; and this with respect to both defendants-applicants (section 127, Contract Act). Nga Ba v. Mi Ok (1) is conclusive that a Burmese Buddhist wife can maintain a suit against her husband during the subsistence of the marriage.

There is nothing to show that "taking a lesser wife" meant doing anything immoral, and if it had meant this, a contract by which defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, bound himself under a penalty not to do the immoral thing could not have been an immoral contract.

These objections are, therefore, unsustainable.

The applicability of section 26 of the Contract Act is a much more difficult question, and it does not appear to have arisen before. There are no decisions in either Upper Burma or Lower Burma or apparently in India. Pollock observes that a contract by a Hindu or a Muhammadan not to take a second wife would seem to be within the section although such a result was probably never contemplated by the Legislature; but that, apart from section 26, agreements of this class would apparently be void under section 23 as tending to defeat the provisions of Hindu or Muhammadan Law. The Buddhist law also recognises polygamy but not perhaps quite in the same way as the Hindu or Muhammadan Law.

The Lower Burma case of Mi San Shwe v. Po Thaik (2), a suit for divorce, dealt with an agreement in which the husband undertook not to take a lesser wife, and there was ill-treatment as in the present case besides the taking of the lesser wife.

That is a feature of the contract which has been practically overlooked by the lower Courts, and also in this Court by the learned Advocates on both sides. The situation was one of those referred to in paragraph 303 of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest:—The wife complains of ill-treatment; the husband has deserted her; he does not work and support her and he is looking about for a second wife; the wife, therefore, asks for a divorce, but instead of insisting on getting this at once, she accepts the husband's undertaking to behave himself in future towards her, that is, to live with and to work for her and support her; and he gives security to this effect.

It is evident that an agreement of the kind is in consonance with the rules of the Buddhist Law. The additional stipulation about the second wife, which was made in the Lower Burma case and in the present case, was merely a part of the undertaking, and without it, the wife had a good cause of action. I do not think that this stipulation is contrary to the Buddhist Law. On this point, I am disposed to concur with Mr. Justice Birks in the case above cited. The contract, therefore, is not, in my opinion, in contravention of section 23, Contract Act. With regard to section 26, it is first necessary to see whether section 24 applies. If it does, then plaintiff-respondent must fail in the event of the stipulation as to not taking a lesser wife being opposed to section 26.

Sections 24, 57 and 58 deal with parts of the same subject and the commentaries of Cunningham and Shephard and Pollock make it clear that "where several distinct promises are made for one and the same lawful consideration and one or more of them are such as the law will not enforce, that will not of itself prevent the rest from being enforceable". Pollock goes on: "The test is whether a distinct consideration which is wholly lawful can be found for the promise called in question. The general rule is that where you cannot sever the illegal from the legal part of the covenant, the contract is altogether void, but where you can sever them..... .....you may reject the bad part and retain the good".

There is an old Bengal case, Musammat Poono Bibi v. Moulvie Faez Bukhsh (3), not unlike the present case. There, a husband executed a bond by which he promised not to marry another wife or do anything without his wife's permission, and also to pay over all his earnings to her. It was held by Sir Richard Couch that section 24 did not apply, but that if any section of the Contract Act applied, it was section 57. He considered the promises not to do anything without the wife's permission as contrary to public policy, but the promise to pay over his earnings was a lawful promise and capable of enforcement.

On this high authority, I am of opinion that the contract in the present case must be held to fall within section 57 rather than section 24.

The promises by which defendant-applicant, Po Gyi, undertook to live in the plaintiffrespondent's house, to work, and support her, were good and lawfnl promises, and there is no reason why this part of the contract should not be enforced though the promise not to take a lesser wife may have been illegal as being in contravention of section 26.

It is, therefore, unnecessary for the purposes of the present case to decide whether in fact section 26 rendered the promise not to take a lesser wife invalid.

The application is dismissed with costs.

ABDULLA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

SAADULLA KHAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Mortgage for a fixed period of 150 years—Right of the representative of mortgagor to redeem before the expiry of the term—Clog on the equity of redemption.

In a suit for redemption in which the deed of mortgage contained the words "tarikh imroza se miadi 150 sal rahn kardi" and, "bad inqiza miad mukarra jab zar-i-rahn 1,600 * * * * ada kiya to fak karakar kabiz wa dakhil loonga";

Held, that the fixation of the period was of the essence of the contract and the right to redeem did not mature before the expiry of the term fixed in the deed.

Further appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Peshawar, dated the 31st October 1911.

Messrs. Prabh Dial and Mufti Muhammad Yakub, for the Appellant.

Lala Hans Raj and Moulvi Saad-ud-din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The material facts of this case are briefly as follows:—By deed dated 11th December 1889, Amirullah of Mardan mortgaged 245 kanals of land described as Nahri to Subedar Major Zaman Shah for Rs. 1,600. It is recited in the document that the mortgage would run for 150 years, and mention is made of the fact that the same land was at the time in possession of the mortgagee by virtue of an earlier mortgage, dated 22nd May 1883, for a term of 16 years. The original executants of the deed have died, and Abdulla, son of the mortgagor, now comes forward with a claim to redeem the land, which has greatly enhanced in value, from Saadullah, grandson of the mortgagee. The Court of first instance (the Sub-Judge of Mardan), relying apparently on the principles laid down in No. 41 of the published rulings of this Court, held that the term fixed was intended for the benefit of the mortgagor rather than of the mortgagee, and decreed redemption accordingly. The case was then carried on appeal to the Court of the Divisional Judge where the opposite view found favour, the Divisional Judge holding that from the circumstances in which the contract was made, it must be inferred that time was of the essence of the agreement and that the right to redeem did not mature till the expiry of the term fixed in the deed, viz., 150 years.

It may be taken as a settled principle of law that when a term is fixed in a deed of mortgage during which the mortgage is to have currency, the object is rather to protect the mortgagor against foreclosure than to secure to the mortgagee possession and enjoyment of the property mortgaged for the term agreed on. The principle is, however, qualified by the proviso that the construction of the agreement is not in the opposite sense; in other words, if the terms of the deed show clearly that the parties did in fact intend that the right to redeem should be deferred, then the mortgage cannot be redeemed till the period so fixed expires. This theory again is subject to the qualification that the equity of redemption is not unfairly or inequitably clogged by the restriction thus imposed on the mortgagor's rights, though it has not yet been clearly settled whether an inordinately long period during which redemption is to be deferred constitutes in itself a sufficient reason for holding the condition to be inequitable, and as such unenforceable in a Court of law.

Turning now to the deed on which the present suit is based, I fully endorse the view taken by the Divisional Judge that time was in fact of the essence of the contract between the parties. This may be gathered both from the wording of the deed and from the very large increase in the mortgage-money as compared with the amount secured under the earlier mortgage which was with possession. In fact, there can be little doubt that the contract was intended for all practical purposes to take effect as a sale. There is no ambiguity in the terms of the deed. It is stated clearly, firstly that the mortgage is for 150 years "tarikh imroza se miadi 150 sal rahn kardi:" secondly, there is the clear stipulation that redemption shall be allowed on expiry of the term in question, viz., "bad inqiza miad muqir-ra jab zar-i-rahn 1,600 * * * * adakiya to fak karakar kabiz wa dakhil loonga." I may notice in parenthesis here that Counsel for the appellant lays stress on the use of the first person singular "loonga" on which he bases the argument that the mortgagor must have contemplated the redemption of the land in his own life-time, and it, therefore, follows that the long term of 150 years was merely fixed for his benefit and for the benefit of his family. The consideration is not, however, entitled to much weight, and it may be argued with equal force that the construction used merely follows from the general wording of the bond and is purely a formal matter.

To resume: as already observed, it appears clearly from the language of the deed that the intention of the parties was that the mortgage should subsist, free from all danger of redemption for a period of 150 years. The case is distinguishable from the published ruling (No. 41) of this Court already cited in that in the deed, on which the earlier case was founded, there is no express mention of the fact that redemption would be deferred till the close of the stipulated period. For these reasons, I hold that the general principle applicable in cases of the kind does not govern the agreement between the parties to the present suit.

There remains the question whether the stipulation ensuring the currency of the mortgage for a period of 150 years constitutes an undue restriction on the right to redeem. I have already stated that there is no settled principle as regards the question whether an unusually long period suspending the right of redemption does in fact unfairly clog the equity of redemption. A period of fifty years has been held not to be unreasonable. [vide Milkhi v. Fattu (1)]. Similarly in the case reported as Ralla v. Amin Chand (2), a mortgage term for 60 years was held valid. Further, it is pointed out, in Sayad Abdul Haq v. Ghulam Jilani (3), that it has never been held that a stipulation operating to postpone the date on which redemption may be claimed is bad per se merely on account of the length of the term fixed. Reference may also be made in this connection to Puran Singh v. Kesar Singh (4), in which case the period was for twenty years. It must be admitted that the longest term in the published judgments which have come to my notice is 60 years; and the argument may very well be put forward that to defer the exercise of the equity of redemption for a longer period is to reduce the right to a mere shadow especially if it is suspended for a century and a half. At the same time it is unfair to the parties to decide the question apart from a consideration of the circumstances in which the contract was executed. Cases may occur in which the mortgagor, in order to secure to himself the most favourable terms possible may deliberately elect to surrender his right of redemption for all practical purposes without, however, expressly extinguishing it in favour of the mortgagee. In this Province, this course is frequently adopted in order to defeat pre-emption; and possibly this was the motive in the background of the present mortgage agreement. I do not think that such a covenant deliberately entered into by the parties should be barred from operation by principles of equity. We may assume that the mortgagee would have advanced a smaller sum had the equity of redemption not been weakened to the extent agreed upon: and, on the other hand, the mortgagor found it to his interest to diminish his ultimate rights to secure a larger sum, In the present case, there can be little doubt that the mortgagor was influenced by the considerations just referred to, and that he did, to all intents and purposes, surrender his rights, the agreement being intended to operate rather as a sale than a mortgage. In these circumstances, it would be against equity to allow redemption at this stage a privilege that would never have been claimed but for the enormous increase in the value of the land. For these reasons, I hold that the length of the period fixed for the mortgage does not operate as a clog on the equity of redemption which should not be enforced, and I affirm the finding of the Divisional Court and reject the appeal. The appellants will pay the respondents costs in this Court.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 60 OF 1911.

Present:—Mr. McColl, A. J. C.

MI SAW MYIN AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

MI SHWE THIN AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Usual form in Upper Burma is usufructuary—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Oral evidence to the effect that more money was paid for sale than is entered in the sale-deed, whether admissible—Buddhist law—Inheritance—Widow—Eldest son—Eldest-daughter—Power of widow to dispose of property inherited by the eldest son or reserved for the eldest daughter—Necessity.

In Upper Burma, the usual form of mortgage is not simple but usufructuary, and if an exception be set up, it should be proved.

Oral evidence is inadmissible to prove that a higher price was paid for a sale than is evidenced by the sale-deed itself.

Where there has been a complete divorce, a daughter, who goes to live with her mother and does not maintain filial relations with her father, is not entitled to inherit the latter's estate on his death.

The heir of a deceased husband, under Buddhist law, is his widow and not any of his children except the eldest son in respect of a fourth of the estate until the death of the widow. The three-fourths share which goes to the widow is her absolute property, to do what she will with.

But she has no right to dispose of the one-fourth share of the eldest son even in the case of necessity. To the eldest daughter also certain specified property is allotted and the remainder goes to the widow as her absolute property. But in the case of necessity, e. g., for the maintenance of younger children, the widow can dispose of the special property reserved for the eldest daughter.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Chatterjee and S. Mukerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, is the daughter of Maung Tha Zin by his wife Ma Po. It has been suggested that her legitimacy has not been proved, but the defendants-appellants were not entitled to raise the point as they did not raise it in their written statement. In 1896, when Ma Shwe Thin was a child of about five, Maung Tha Zin, who lived with his wife, Ma Po, at Yenangyaung, went up to Mandalay to prosecute an appeal before this Court. He never returned; and died at Mandalay in 1263.

Before he went to Mandalay, he mortgaged an oil-well to the defendant-appellant Ma Saw Myin's father, Maung Chit Po, for Rs. 2,500. After his death, Ma Po executed a deed of sale of this well in favour of Ma Saw Myin, who had succeeded to a portion of Maung Chit Po's estate on his death.

In 1910, the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, brought a suit for redemption of the oil-well, alleging that Ma Po had been divorced from Maung Tha Zin before his death, that she, therefore, had no power whatever to alienate his property and the sale was void and the mortgage was still in existence and capable of being redeemed.

Six days later, the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Tin, brought another suit for redemption alleging that she was a daughter of Maung Tha Zin by his wife, Ma Kyi deceased, that she was entitled to a share of his estate and that, therefore, she too had a right to redeem.

The two suits were tried together.

The defendants-appellants denied that Ma Po has been divorced, and pleaded that she had power to sell the well for a legal necessity. They also pleaded that they had done everything possible to obtain a good title, and for this purpose had insisted upon Ma Po's obtaining a Succession Certificate and that the sale, having been effected in good faith, could not now be impeached. They also pleaded that a suit for redemption would not lie as long as the deed of sale was uncancelled, and that a suit for its cancellation would be barred by limitation. They denied that the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Tin, was Maung Tha Zin's daughter, and alleged that even if she were his daughter, she was illegitimate, and that even if she were legitimate, she was not entitled to inherit.

The learned Additional Judge framed the following issues:—

1. Whether Ma Shwe Tin was the legitimate daughter of Maung Tha Zin?

2. Whether Ma Po had a right to sell the whole or any part of the well, and could pass a valid title thereto?

3. Whether Ma Po was divorced or not?

4. Whether the suit was time-barred?

He decided the first issue in the affirmative, and also the third. In dealing with the second issue, he went far astray owing to his failure to understand what a Succession Certificate is. A Succession Certificate is a certificate granted to a person entitled to succeed to the whole or part of the estate of a deceased person to enable him to collect debts due to the deceased. It does not empower the holder to alienate any of the deceased's estate or to do anything except recover the debts due to the deceased. The certificate has been produced, and the only debt entered in the schedule is the mortgage debt of Rs. 2,500. But that was a debt due by Maung Tha Zin, not to him. How the certificate came to be granted is not easy to see.

The learned Advocate for the defendants-appellants says that, of course, what Ma Po really required was Letters of Administration, and he contends that the District Court should have treated her application for a Succession Certificate as an application for Letters of Administration and granted her Letters, and he has gone so far as to suggest that the Succession Certificate should be treated by this Court as Letters of Administration. It is unnecessary to do more than mention this extraordinary proposition.

The learned Additional Judge found that Ma Po, having been divorced, had no power to dispose of the well, and that the sale was void.

He found that the suit was within time, and granted a decree for redemption to the two plaintiffs-respondents jointly.

The defendants-appellants have now appealed on various grounds, and the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, has appealed separately against the findings of the District Court that the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Tin, is Maung Tha Zin's legitimate daughter, and that she is entitled to redeem the well.

The line of argument taken on behalf of the defendants-appellants is that the divorce set up was not proved and was inconsistent with Ma Po's conduct, that she being Maung Tha Zin's widow had power to dispose of his estate for a legal necessity, that as there is no evidence to the contrary (the mortgage-bond was not proved), it must be presumed that the mortgage was a simple one, because a simple mortgage is the ordinary form of mortgage; that the payment of the mortgage debt was thus a legal necessity; that as a matter of fact though the purchase-money is stated in the deed of sale to be Rs. 2,500, the amount of the mortgage-debt—a sum of Rs. 400 was paid in cash in addition. This is the main argument, but it is further urged that the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, had failed to keep up filial relations with her father, and was, therefore, not entitled to inherit his estate.

In my opinion, the line of argument taken up cannot succeed at all, because it is clear that no legal necessity was proved. In Upper Burma, the usual form of mortgage is not simple but usufructuary, and if an exception be claimed in the case of mortgages of oil-wells, that exception should have been proved. Moreover, it is not suggested that any interest was provided for, and there is no evidence of any demand of the principal. Everything points to the mortgage having been usufructuary, and the fourth paragraph of the defendants-appellants' written statement shows clearly that it was so.

There was, therefore, no necessity whatever to pay off the mortgage-debt, and the sale was clearly not for Ma Shwe Thin's benefit. As to the payment of Rs. 400, I would say that, apart from Mr. S. Mukerjee's objection that if such a payment were made there was a fraud committed on the Stamp Revenue and the defendants-appellants should not be allowed to rely upon their own fraud, the payment of this sum as part of the purchase-money cannot be proved, as evidence of such payment would contradict the terms of the deed of sale. It is contended that payment of consideration can always be proved under Explanation 3 to section 91, Evidence Act. But that Explanation has no application, as the payment of Rs.400 is not mentioned in the document. The document says that the well was sold for Rs. 2,500, and oral evidence to the effect that it was sold not for Rs. 2, 500 but for Rs. 2,900 is clearly inadmissible under section 92, Evidence Act.

In reply to the second argument to the effect that the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, was not entitled to inherit her father's estate because she had not maintained filial relations with him, Mr. Chatterjee has urged that Ma Shwe Thin was a small child when her father went to Mandalay and had no opportunity of exercising any choice in the matter and Mr. S. Mukerjee on behalf of the plaintiff respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, against whom the same argument has been adduced, has cited Ma Taik v. Ma Myin (1), in which it was held that the Buddhist Code does not give any meritorious value to mere living together or make the opposite state of things a reason for exclusion from inheritance. But in that case there was no divorce, and the question, therefore, was whether the child was excluded from inheritance as—to quote the Dhammathats—a "child like a dog" and it was held that mere absence of joint living was not sufficient to exclude: there must be proof of intentional neglect. It is, I think, established that where there has been a complete divorce, a daughter, who goes to live with her mother and does not maintain filial relations with her father, is not entitled to inherit the latter's estate on his death. It is not necessary to do more than cite Ma Pon v. Maung Po Chin (2) in support of this rule. The last words of the heading to that ruling are important: "When there has been a division of property at the time of the divorce." If there is no division of property at the time of the divorce, the divorce is not complete.

Now, in the present case, it is not alleged that there was any formal divorce. Maung Tha Zin left Yenangyaung for Mandalay on legitimate business and never returned, and after leaving Yenangyaung, he never had any communication with Ma Po. It is alleged that the separation, coupled with the neglect, gradually became desertion, and that after a time, Ma Po became automatically divorced. It is also alleged that Ma Po took another husband before Maung Tha Zin's death, and that this fact evidenced her intention of putting an end to the marriage tie, which she was entitled to do, and completed the divorce. The evidence that she took another husband before Maung Tha Zin's death is not very clear, but I do not think it is necessary to go into the point, because, for the purposes of this case, I think it is quite immaterial whether there was a divorce or not.

In the present case, there was apparently no quarrel and no intentional desertion at first, and, consequently, the texts cited in section 312 of U Gaung's Digest do not apply. In sections 244 and 245, a large number of texts are cited, which lay down the number of years which a wife must wait, when her husband has gone on a journey, before she is entitled to take another husband. They do not agree, but shortly the rule may be stated thus: if the husband takes another wife during his absence, the first wife must wait till three years, otherwise she must wait a longer time, depending upon the purpose for which the journey was undertaken. Though in many texts it is laid down that if the wife takes another husband without waiting the requisite number of years, she is to forfeit all the joint property, curiously enough, with the exception of the Vicchedani, none of the texts say what is to become of the joint property if the husband does not return. The text from the Vicchedani, runs as follows: "If the husband, who has gone on a journey, marries again, his former wife shall wait for him three years. If he does not return after the expiry of that period, let her take possession of all the property and free him from all conjugal obligations to her."

This seems to be the obvious rule, because the wife would be entitled to divorce owing to her husband's fault and would, therefore, be entitled to all the joint property. And it seems likely that the rule is not mentioned in the other Dhammathats, because as the joint property would naturally be left in the wife's possession or under her control, it was considered that the rule was so obvious that it was unnecessary to mention it.

Assuming then that Ma Po married again before Maung Tha Zin's death and that she thereby became divorced from him, the oil-well in suit became her property and not that of her daughter, and she had an absolute right to dispose of it, as she thought fit, and even if she had mortgaged it and not sold it, her daughter could have no right to redeem it during Ma Po's life-time.

As the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, based her suit on her mother's divorce, the above finding is sufficient to dispose of her suit. But as it has been urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants, and tacitly admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, that on the death of a husband, the widow has not an absolute right over the whole property but only a limited interest in it and that she cannot alienate it except for a legal necessity for the benefit of her children, I think it is necessary to point out that though this view has been accepted in many cases in Lower Burma, the latest of which are Ma Nyo v. Ma Youk (3) and Ma Pe v. Ma Thein Yin (4), in which the ruling Ma On v. Shwe O (5) was followed and it was held that "a widow according to the Burmese Buddhist law of Inheritance has an absolute interest in half of the property which had been jointly owned by her deceased husband and herself, and that in the remaining half she has only a life-interest with power of selling it in case of necessity," it is opposed to the ruling of this Court in Ma Min Tha v. Ma Naw (6), in which it was held that "the heir of a deceased husband under Buddhist law is his widow and not any of his children (except the eldest son in respect of a fourth of the estate) until the death of the widow, and the children have no such interest in the estate as is contemplated in section 91, Transfer of Property Act."

(1) U. B. R. (1897-1901) II, 193.
(2) U. B. R. (1897-1901) II, 116.

The Chief Court of Lower Burma has followed Ma On v. Shwe O (5), and in that case the opinion of Mr. Jardine, expressed in Nga Shwe Yo v. Mi San Byu (7) on this particular point, was accepted, but it seems to have escaped the notice of the Special Court that Mr. Jardine to a great extent resiled from this opinion in Maung Po Lat v. Mi Po Le (8), in which he said: "Under the first issue, it is necessary, in deciding the present case, to allude to the doctrine in Nga Shwe Yo's case (7), that a widow may not, without the children's consent, unless for sufficient cause, alienate the joint property. Since then the Buddhist law has received great attention and new authorities are available. I would hesitate to apply that doctrine except very cautiously and to particular circumstances."

The text on which the doctrine is based is section 5 of the 10th Book of the Manukye Dhammathat (Richardson's translation), which deals with the partition of the estate on the death of the father and runs: "Let the eldest son have the riding horse, etc.,.....Let the residue be divided into four parts, of which let the eldest son have one and the mother and younger children three. This is the law when the mother does not marry again. If the mother uses the property for necessary subsistence, let her have the right to do so."

It was noticed that section 11 was apparently inconsistent with section 5, and an attempt was made to reconcile the two texts.

Since then a large number of texts have become available. Those most applicable to the present case are collected in section 31 of the Digest, which deals with the partition between mother and daughter on the death of the father.

The first text quoted is from the Mano and runs as follows:—

"The daughter shall get the bracelets, belt and ornaments given her before the death of the father and by both parents. She shall also get out of the estate one family of slaves, one pair of bullocks and a fair portion of seed paddy and peas. The mother shall get the rest of the property. Although the daughter is the offspring of the father, still it is the mother who has direct control over her. Should the mother exhaust the property during her life-time, let it be so; but if anything is left unexhausted, the daughter shall get it."

The Pyu Dhammathat gives the same rule. So also the Kaingza. The Myingun says: "The mother shall get the rest of the property and on her death, the daughter shall get what is left."

The Dhammathat Kyaw says: "The mother shall get the rest of the property, animate and inanimate."

The Dhamma runs as follows:—

"The eldest daughter shall have one female slave, two milchcows, one pair of buffaloes, one pe of land, and a quantity of Indian corn, paddy, millet, barley and sessamum sufficient for seed purposes. The mother and younger daughters shall get the rest of the property, animate and inanimate. Should there be no such property as enumerated above but only gold and silver, payment must be made in silver according to the following valuation .....But the mother is at liberty to sell them and maintain herself if such a course is necessary."

Clearly, in this passage it is to sell the special property reserved for the eldest daughter in case of necessity that power is given. The passage relating to selling in a case of necessity does not refer to the bulk of the property at all.

The Monukye gives very much the same rule and ends thus: "Partition of each kind should be made only when there are three or four female slaves, ten each of buffaloes, bullocks and goats and 25 pes of land. The above is the mode of partition when the mother does not marry again. She is at liberty to exhaust (the property) when spent on necessaries. The word 'property' does not occur in the original text."

With this must be compared the rule given in the same Dhammathat for partition between mother and son on the death of the father in section 30 of the Digest. It runs: "The son shall get his father's elephant, pony, cup, sword, wearing apparel and bearers of the goblet and betel-box. The mother shall get her wearing apparel, cups, ornaments and female slaves. The rest of the property shall be divided into four shares and the mother and younger children shall take three shares. This is the rule of partition when the mother does not marry again. If the property is exhausted by the mother, nothing shall be said about it."

It is to be observed that no mention is made of any necessity.

The Kandaw Dhammathat says: "The mother shall get the rest of the property. Although the daughter is the offspring of the father, yet it is the mother, who controls her and brings her up from childhood. The daughter shall get on the death of the mother what is left unexhausted by her.

The Vannadhamma: "Why should not the eldest daughter, being like the eldest son an offspring of the father, get $\frac{1}{4}$th share of the inheritance? Because the daughter is entirely controlled by the mother and the property left unexhausted by the mother, after use during her life-time devolves on the daughter when the mother dies."

The Rasi says: "If the mother exhausts the property during her life-time, let it be so."

Viunicchaya says: "The rest of the property, animate and inanimate, shall be taken by the mother. Should the estate be large enough, the mother ought to give the daughter a suitable share in addition." This is plainly a moral precept.

The Manuvannana says: "If the daughter lives with the mother, she is not entitled to get any property although she is the offspring of her father. If the mother exhausts the property during her life-time in her own use, or in maintaining her second husband or in performing works of merit, she commits no fault."

The rest of the texts quoted in section 31 of the Digest are to the same effect with the exception of the Amwebon and the Kyannet. Of these, the former, after stating what particular property is to be given to the eldest daughter and that the rest is to go to the mother and younger daughters, says: "Partition should be made only when there are three or four female slaves, ten each of buffaloes, bullocks and goats and 25 pes of land. The above is the mode of partition, when the mother does not marry again. She is at liberty to exhaust the property when required for necessaries." The word "property" has been inserted by the translator.

It will be seen that this is the same rule as that given in the Manukye, and the rule given by this Dhammathat for the partition between mother and son on the death of the father is also the same as that given by the Manukye.

The last few lines of the text from the Kyannet are as follows in the English translation: "On the death of the mother, the daughter is entitled to her property. Let the mother have a life-interest therein; and should she exhaust the property during her life-time, let it be so; the unexhausted portion, if any, shall be enjoyed by the daughter subsequently."

I venture the opinion that this translation is not accurate. The underlined passage in Burmese is as follows: ..... The word ..... means literally to "eat", "corrode", "consume," and that it is not used in the special sense in which it is used in the expression ..... is shown by the words which immediately follow, viz., ... I would say that the next English equivalent of the word ..... in this passage is "spend," and the translation should ran "let the mother spend (the property) as long as she is alive, and if she spends it all, let her do so."

It will thus be seen that the only Dhammathats, which lend any colour at all to the doctrine that the widow can only spend her deceased husband's property in a case of necessity, are the Dhamma, the Manukye and the Amwebon, and that in each instance the passage is immediately preceded by a clause to the effect that if there is not a sufficient quantity of certain specified property, a portion of which should ordinarily be given to the eldest daughter on the death of her father, then this division is not to be made. The inference is irresistible that the clause in which necessity is referred to is governed by the clause, which immediately precedes it, and that the rule is as follows: "On the death of the father, certain specified property is allotted to the eldest daughter and the remainder goes to the widow and is her absolute property, but that if there should remain insufficient property for the maintenance of the widow and younger children, were the eldest daughter to take her allotted share, then the widow is at liberty to spend even this specific property for the maintenance of herself and her children."

This interpretation is borne out by the texts which relate to partition between the mother and the eldest son on the death of the father. The eldest son gets certain specified property, the mother gets other specified property, one-fourth of the remainder goes to the son and the rest to the mother. Nothing whatever is said in any of the Dhammathats about the mother having the right to dispose of any property whatever in a case of necessity. The inference is that in this case, the three-fourths share which goes to the widow is her absolute property to do what she will with, and that even in the case of necessity, she has not a right to dispose of the specified property, which goes to the eldest son or the one-fourth share which is his portion. Why should this difference be made between the eldest son and the eldest daughter? The answer is given by many Dhammathats: The eldest son is obtained through the prayers of the parents and has helped in the acquisition of the property. The eldest daughter is completely under the control of her mother, whereas the eldest son is not.

In the present case, the oil-well in dispute cannot possibly be brought into the category of property set apart for the eldest daughter, and I, therefore, hold that, assuming that Ma Po was not divorced from Maung Tha Zin, the oil-well became Ma Po's absolute property on his death unless he left other heirs besides Ma Po's daughter, and that on Maung Tha Zin's death, the first plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, acquired nothing more than a contingent interest in the oil-well and that she lost this contingent interest on Ma Po's selling the well.

Therefore, whether Ma Po was divorced or not, the plaintiff-respondent Ma Shwe Thin's suit was not maintainable.

With regard to the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin's claim to redeem, very little need be said.

The defendants-appellants denied that she was Maung Tha Zin's daughter. It was, therefore, necessary for her to prove this. There is evidence of a somewhat dubious nature that Ma Kyi was Maung Tha Zin's wife before he married Ma Po and that he had a daughter by her and that that daughter was named Ma Shwe Tin. But there is absolutely no evidence whatever that the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, is that daughter. Ma Kyi is dead and the witnesses who depose to her giving birth to a daughter begotten of Maung Tha Zin lost sight of that daughter when she was a few months old. I am practically asked to decide that Ma Shwe Tin is Maung Tha Zin's daughter on the statements of a few witnesses to the effect that she resembled him. That I decline to do. I was also asked by her Advocate to summon her and the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, before me, so that I might note whether there was a family likeness: I declined. If I had done so and had not noticed any resemblance, nothing would have been gained and if I had fancied that there was some or even a marked resemblance between the two, I should have declined to be guided by my fancy. For aught that appears to the contrary, Ma Shwe Tin may be an absolute impostor, who is using a possible resemblance to the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Shwe Thin, as a means of obtaining a share in an estate to which she has not a shadow of a claim.

I do not, of course, say that this is so, but there is not even the least particle of real evidence that Ma Shwe Tin is Maung Tha Zin's daughter, and, therefore, her suit must fail.

The decrees of the District Court are accordingly set aside and both suits are dismissed with all costs.

Suit dismissed.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 54—Award or part of award—Decree ex parte—Default of claimant—Application for restoration, refusal of—Appeal against order refusing to restore case, whether competent.

Under section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, an appeal lies only from an award or part of an award.

A claim was decided by the Land Acquisition Judge ex parte, as the claimant was not present when the case was called. An application to set aside the ex parte decree was refused and the claimant filed an appeal against the order of refusal:

Held, that no appeal lay, as the order was not an award.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The right of appeal in proceedings before the Court under the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 is defined by section 54. Therefore, we have to see whether the order, of which complaint is now made, is an award or any part of an award. That has not been and could not be contended, and, therefore, no appeal lies. We must accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JAURA SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), Rules under, rule 17 (ii)—Lambardari—Succession to office—Primogeniture, rule of—Adopted son cannot succeed.

The expression "nearest eligible heir according to the rule of primogeniture", in rule 17 (ii) of the rules under the Land Revenue Act, should be strictly construed; it does not apply to an adopted son.

The rule of primogeniture embraces only descent by brith and does not embrace descent by adoption.

Consequently, in the case of a vacancy in the office of headman, an adopted son cannot succeed to or through his adoptive father under any rule of primogeniture.

Hira v. Wazira, 9 P. R. 1892 Rev.; Maula Dad v. Hayat, 14 P.R. 1886 Rev.; Sher Singh v. Subha, 10 P.R. 1892 Rev.; Suchet Singh v. Basant Singh, 11 P. R. 1892 Rev.; Shah Muhammad v. Diwan Baksh, 12 P. R. 1892 Rev. and Ramjas v. Nihala, 13 P. R. 1892 Rev., explained and distinguished.

A., B. and C. were three brothers. A. was the eldest and C. the youngest. The last holder of the post of Lambardar was a descendant of B., and he died childless.

D. and E., the two sons of C., claimed the office. D. was the elder son but E. had been adopted by A. who had no son of his own:

Held, (1) that E. could not succeed to the lambardarship as the adopted son of A;

(2) that D. was entitled to succeed and his title could not be postponed to E. in consequence of the latter's adoption by A.

Petition for revision of the order of the Commissioner of Jallundur, dated the 16th October 1911.

Lehna Singh, (deceased), respondent adopted as his son.	Kala Singh,	Nand Singh,
	Jawahar Singh,
	Ishar Singh (deceased, lambardar, died childless.)
Bhag (appellant).	Jaura (respondent.)

It is unnecessary to investigate the question as to how the lambardarship came to Kala Singh's branch of the family, Lehna Singh being passed over. It is not seriously contended that if Lehna Singh were now alive, he would still be liable to supersession, or that if the respondent were real son and not merely adopted son of Lehna Singh, he would not be the heir entitled to succeed according to the custom of primogeniture. The whole question in the case is, whether the fact of Jaura, the respondent, being an adopted son impairs his claim based on heirship by primogeniture through his adoptive father.

The wording of rule 17 (ii) of the rules under the Land Revenue Act is important, and it is important to notice the difference between this wording and that of rule A. I. 4 of the rules under the Land Revenue Act, 1871, which governed the appointment of headmen prior to 1887. Under the rules in force before 1887, the person who, subject to certain considerations which for present purpose are irrelevant, was to be appointed lambardar was "the heir who, according to the custom of the village, may have the first claim to succeed." Under the rule which is now in force, "the nearest eligible heir according to the rule of primogeniture shall be appointed unless some special custom of succession to the office be distinctly proved." There is no mention of any special custom of succession to the office in the present case, and, as remarked by Mr. Steedman in the case reported as Hira v. Wazira (1), it is difficult to see how a custom properly so called can have arisen in regard to the appointment of a successor to an office which dates only from annexation and appointments to which are made by the Collector.

The importance, which, as I have said above, attaches to the difference between the wording of the rules of succession prior to and after the year 1887, arises from the circumstance that the rulings, under which adopted sons have in the past sometimes successfully maintained their claims to succeed to the post of lambardar, are all referable to the leading case, Maula Dad v. Hayat (2), a ruling given when the Act of 1871 was in force. In the series of rulings, which are published as Hira v. Wazira (1), Sher Singh v. Subha (3), Sucket Singh v. Basant Singh (4), Shah Muhammad v. Diwan Bakhsh (5); Ramjas v. Nihala (6), it has been laid down that while an adopted, son who is of a different got from his adoptive father, is not entitled to succeed his adoptive father in the office of village headman, an adopted son who, being an agnate, is of the same got is, in accordance with the ruling of Maula Dad v. Hayat (2), entitled to succeed. In none of these rulings of 1892, is there any reference to the fact that since the date of Maula Dad v. Hayat (2), the law of succession to the office of lambardar had been altered. There is no allegation in the present case of any special custom of succession to the office of lambardar. In fact, the respondent no less than the appellant claims to succeed by virtue of the rule of primogeniture. The question then for decision in this case is whether the rule of primogeniture embraces descent by adoption as well as descent by birth. According to the etymology of the word 'primogeniture', the adoptive tie is not connoted. It is true that section 2 (19) of the General Clauses Act, 1868, provided that the word "son" should include an adopted son in all Acts made between 1868 and 1897 (when the present General Clauses Act came into force), but we have not got the word "son" in the Land Revenue Rule which we are now considering and, moreover, the General Clauses Act of 1868 did not apply to rules. There is ample warrant for applying strict canons of interpretation for the determination of the meaning of the expression "rule of primogeniture." In a somewhat analogous case under section 59 of the Tenancy Act, the Chief Court held, in Fatteh Muhammad v. Musammat Jiwan (7), that an heir appointed by any of the customary methods recognised among owners of land in the Punjab cannot be regarded as a "male lineal descendant in the male line of the descent" within the meaning of that section. Applying a similarly strict principle of interpretation to the present case, I am unable to hold that in the case of a vacancy in the office of a headmana, an dopted son can succeed to or through his father under any rule of primogeniture. In coming to this

(5) 12 P. R. 1892, Rev.
(6) 13 P. R. 1892, Rev.

conclusion, I have not sought for any customary interpretation of the meaning of the word 'primogeniture,' in connection with the adoptive relationship as it is very unlikely that there is any village custom on the subject, but it is not irrelevant to observe that where, as in the case of the Phulkian States, primogeniture was the custom of succession to the chiefship, the right of adoption did not confer on the person adopted a claim to inherit the chiefship. In fact, succession to a chiefship did not in any case go to an adopted son (Inheritance to Chiefships, by Sir Lepel Griffin, page 49), a precedent which justifies the view that succession to an office does not necessarily follow the rules of family inheritance.

Lastly, the position of the respondent, Jaura, in the present case is affected by the circumstance that the vacant lambardarship was not held by his adoptive father. The general custom of the Punjab appears to be that an adopted son succeeds only lineally, that is to say, to his adoptive father only, and does not succeed to his adoptive father's relations collaterally—vide Budhawa Singh v. Ganesha (8) Imam Bakhsh v. Kasu (9), Fazla v. Ilam Din (10), Uttam Singh v. Wazir Singh (11), Fateh Muhammad v. Nizam-ud-Din (12) and Ram Ditta v. Takht Mal (13), and many others. Under these rulings, Jaura, qua adopted son of Lehna Singh, could not succeed to the estate of the deceased Lambardar. A fortiori, he could not succeed to his lambardarship. In conclusion, I desire to note that from the point of view of expediency, there are good grounds for refusing to treat adoption as givig a claim to the office of headman, as observed by Mr. Steedman in Hira v. Wazira (1). "Adoptions are very often made to spite the heirs. I do not think that a Lambardar should be able to gratify private spite by imposing a Lambardar on the village whom the villagers must dislike."

The appellant, Bhag, has for many years acted as sarbarah of the deceased Lambardar, and it is anomalous that his title to succeed to the office should be postponed to that of a younger brother in consequence of the act of a third party.

For the foregoing reasons, I now, under section 16 (4) of the Land Revenue Act, direct that Bhag be appointed Lambardar in place of the respondent Jaura.

FACTS.—The plaintiff in this case sued to contest a notice of ejectment and to establish rights of occupancy in certain land situate in Tika Siwana, Tehsil Dehra. The first Court decreed the claim by declaring the plaintiff an occupancy-tenant under section 5 (1) (b) of Act XVI of 1887.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II—Arbitration—Award—Objection to award—Award set aside—Power of Appellate Court to go behind the order setting aside the award.

A Court of Appeal has power to consider the validity of an order setting aside an award and to restore the award if it has been set aside on insufficient grounds.

Case-law on the subject discussed.

Petition for revision of the order of the Divisional Judge, Peshawar, dated the 26th February 1912.

Maulvi Saad-ud-din, for the Petitioner.

Babu Sunder Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit agreed in the Court of first instance (the Honorary Munsif of Peshawar) to submit the case to arbitration. The award was in plaintiff's favour but on objection by defendant No. 2, the award was set aside and the suit decided on the merits against the plaintiff. The latter appealed to the Divisional Judge who, going behind the order of the Munsif setting aside the award, held the award to be valid and passed a decree in accordance therewith in plaintiff's favour.

The point for decision before this Court is whether the Divisional Judge's action in accepting the award, after its rejection by the Court of first instance, is legally sustainable or not. This question has been frequently before the various High Courts during the past thirty years without any approach to finality. There is some conflict of opinion on the subject between the High Courts themselves and in some cases the same Courts have committed themselves to opposite rulings. Most of the decisions belong to a period prior to the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure and in view of the doubt surrounding the question, it is a matter for regret that the point was not definitely decided by the Legislature.

I shall briefly discuss the leading cases before deciding the issue. The earliest case decided in the Punjab is that published as Sher Jang v. Maihun (1). It was then held that a Court of Appeal can under section 591 (105 of the present Code) consider the validity of an order setting aside an award, and if it holds that the award was overridden on insufficient grounds, it can reverse the order of the first Court and give effect to the arbitrator's finding. The issue was not, however, fully discussed, and the reasoning is not convincing. For the plaintiff-respondent, much weight is placed on a later ruling [Municipal Committee, Lahore v. Buta (2)] of the Chief Court, in which case the Chief Court itself overruled the order of the District Judge setting aside an award, and gave effect to the arbitrator's decision. The case had been decided on the merits by the District Judge and the invalidity of his order was made one of the grounds of appeal. This ruling is directly in point but its value is to some extent depreciated by the fact that the question whether the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the award on appeal was not discussed at all. In a third case Sobha Ram v. Ram Das(3), the learned Judges observed that "the authorities on this question seem to be conflicting." The issue before the Court was whether the Divisional Judge had wrongly decided that he could not go behind the order of the Court of first instance setting aside the award. A decision was, however, avoided as the Chief Court found that the first Court was fully justified in setting aside the award. In view of this attitude of the Court, it may perhaps be asserted that the question is still open to argument in the Punjab Courts. Two early rulings, Nanak Chand v. Ram Narayan (4)

(1) 72 P. R. 1881.
(2) 65 P. R. 1899.
(3) 63 P. R. 1907.
(4) 2 A. 181.

and Abdul Rahman v. Yar Muhammad (5) are in favour of the view that an Appellate Court has jurisdiction to restore the award on appeal, but these rulings refer to the old Code of Civil Procedure (1859) and are, perhaps, not strictly in point. The later decisions of the Allahabad High Court are, however, almost uniformly against the earlier rulings. These decisions will be referred to further on. Two rulings of the Madras High Court are in favour of plaintiff-respondent. The first, George v. Vastian (6), is to some extent similar to the present case. It was then held that under section 591 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the legality of the order of the first Court remitting the award for re-consideration could be challenged on appeal. In this case, however, the issue was not examined, the Court contenting itself with referring to a small group of authorities in support of its view, without any discussion at all, and without any reference to rulings in the opposite sense. The case was decided in 1898. In 1908, the same Court Achuthayya v. Thimmayya (7) affirmed the view previously taken dissenting from Ganga Prasad v. Kura (8) and Abdul Rahman v. Yar Muhammad (5). Here, again, there is no discussion of the issue. The Court merely refers to eight published rulings of the various High Courts and states that it prefers to follow these decisions as against the two rulings from which it expressed its dissent. It may be noted that the rulings cited with approval emanated from all four High Courts. Among these is a decision of the Allahabad High Court of 1903, published as Ram Jiwan v. Nawal Singh (9), in which on second appeal the award, which had been set aside by the Court of first instance, was accepted and a decree passed in conformity therewith. The authorities are not, however, discussed in the judgment and there is no reasoning on the particular issue with which I am now concerned. A case decided in the Calcutta High Court, published as Shyama Charan Pramanik v. Prohlad Darwan (10), is quoted by plaintiff-respondent's Counsel. Here a Single Judge of the High Court held by implication that an Appellate Court could restore the award; but that it must before doing so consider the objections urged against it. Finally, it is sought to derive assistance from an obiter dictum in Dimodar Trimbak Dharap v. Raghunath Hari (11) to the effect that an erroneous order on an award may form a ground of appeal against any decree that may be passed in the suit.

I now pass on to consider the rulings in support of the opposite theory. Taking Ganga Prasad v. Kura (8) in the first instance. Here the District Judge had on appeal restored an award set aside in the first Court. The High Court held that no appeal lay under section 521 to the District Judge from the order of the Munsif setting aside the award. It is not altogether clear whether the Munsif's order setting aside the award had been made the subject of appeal or merely a ground of appeal under section 591, Civil Procedure Code. The general trend of the argument is, however, towards the view that an award cannot be restored on appeal. The same view was stated with greater definiteness in Kalyan Das v. Pyare Lal (12), in which Ganga Prasad v. Kura (8), decided by the same Court, was cited with approval.

It is not an easy matter to give appropriate weight to the authorities examined in the preceding paragraph. In the Punjab Courts, as already noted, the question appears still open to argument though it must be admitted that the Chief Court have twice assumed that an Appellate Court had the jurisdiction in question. The Madras High Court appears to hold that an award set aside in the first Court can be given operation in appeal, and on the whole, it may be said that the Calcutta High Court has taken up a similar position though there is not so clear a series of rulings. As regards the Bombay High Court, there occurs in Damodar Trimbak Dharap v. Raghunath Hari (11) an obiter dictum in a similar sense, and it may be assumed that the view therein expressed would ordinarily be followed in that Court. In fact, the general trend of opinion in the three High Courts, Madras Bombay and Calcutta, and in the Chief Court of the Punjab, appears to be in favour of the theory that an award can be given effect to in appeal. In the Allahabad High Court, the position is different, but in view of the decision of 1908, their attitude is somewhat undecided. On the whole, looking to the above considerations, I am inclined to the view that the balance of judicial authority is in favour of the view that Appellate Courts have the power referred to.

The intention of the Legislature in the matter is not altogether clear. It is, however, manifest that there was no intention to allow an appeal from an order setting aside an award, otherwise this would have appeared among the orders from which an appeal is expressly allowed by section 104, Civil Procedure Code. On the other hand, the terms of section 105 are sufficiently wide to support the theory that an order setting aside an award may be impeached on appeal. It can scarcely be argued that the words "affecting the decision of the case", which limit the operation of the privilege, do not apply in the case of an order setting aside an award. Clearly, the supersession of arbitration proceedings has a direct connection with the decision of the case. Prima facie, then, there is nothing in the law as it stands to prevent an aggrieved party from challenging in appeal an order setting aside an award, and in the interests of justice, it is doubtless desirable that the principle involved should receive recognition. In view of these considerations, and seeing that the weight of judicial authority is in favour of the theory, I decide that a Court of Appeal has authority to consider an order setting aside an award and to restore the award if it has been set aside on insufficient grounds. I, therefore, decline to interfere with the finding of the Divisional Judge in this case and I reject the application for revision. Defendant-petitioner will pay costs in this Court.

Mr. Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs' suit for a declaratory decree to the effect that they are entitled to 10 kanals, $9\frac{1}{4}$ marlas of certain land has been dismissed by the lower Courts, the Subordinate Judge holding that their claim is barred both by limitation and by the provisions of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and the Divisional Judge holding that it is barred under the last-mentioned provisons of the Civil Procedure Code. They have preferred a further appeal to this Court and we have heard the case argued at some considerable length.

The facts are as follows:—

The land in suit belongs to a joint holding of which, in 1869, two branches of the same family were proprietors, plaintiffs are members of one branch being descendants of one Bishna Singh; defendants Nos. 1—7 are descendants of Ram Sahai and belong to the other branch. Some time between 1879 and 1906, Darbara Singh, Hazari Lal, Basant Singh, Haranam Singh, and Sundar Singh purchased a share in this holding from one of the descendants of Ram Sahai and in 1907, three persons applied to the Revenue Authorities for partition of the joint holding and contended that the said partition should be effected in accordance with the entries in the Revenue Records of 1879 and subsequent years. In this contention, they were supported by all the other descendants of Ram Sahai, but plaintiffs objected that the said entries were erroneous, and that partition must be effected in accordance with the entries in the Settlement Record of 1869, which differed radically from the later entries upon this point.

The Revenue Officer, who dealt with the application for partition, referred plaintiffs to the Civil Courts to establish their contentions, and as a result the descendants of Bishna Singh (with the exception of three persons who refused to sue and were, therefore, made pro forma defendants) instituted a suit on the 3rd December 1907 against Darbara Singh, Hazari Mal, Basant Singh, Haranam Singh and Sundar Singh, and the descendants of Ram Sahai (present defendants Nos. 1—7) and certain mortgagees holding under the latter. In this suit, plaintiffs claimed that a declaratory decree should be passed in their favour to the effect that partition should be made according to ancestral shares as specified in the Settlement Record of 1869, and in their original plaint, they claimed relief only as against Darbara Singh and his covendees. In their amended plaint, however, which was filed on the 27th March 1908, they asked for relief against all the defendants, but in other respects the terms of their plaint remained unamended.

In June 1908, Darbara Singh and his covendees compromised their dispute with plaintiffs and the Court thereupon passed a decree against all defendants to the effect that plaintiffs were entitled to 41 kanals, 18 marals of land; Darbara Singh and his co-vendees to 20 kanals, and the other defendants to 27 kanals 11 marlas. This decree was passed ex parte as against the latter defendants who applied in August 1908 to have the decree set aside in so far as it affected their interest. Their prayer was granted and on the 12th December 1908, the Munsif granted plaintiffs a decree against Darbara Singh and his covendees alone, declaring that the latter were entitled only to 20 kanals of land. The Munsif dismissed plaintiffs' suit as against all other defendants on the ground that no cause of action had been disclosed as against them, and in his judgment he stated that plaintiffs were at liberty, if so advised, to bring another suit against these defendants.

In January 1909, plaintiffs accordingly brought the present suit and have impleaded as co-defendants all the persons who were defendants in the former suit, with the exception of the three members of their own branch of the family who refused to join as plaintiffs in that suit. These three persons (Gurditta, Kanshi Ram and Lachman Das) have now joined forces with plaintiffs. These being the facts of the case, the question which we have to decide is, whether the present suit is entertainable. The lower Courts held that it is not, and that it is barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Sundar Das contends that this decision is erroneous, inasmuch as in the former suit there was no adjudication by the Court upon the question now at issue between plaintiffs and the descendants of Ram Sahai (defendants Nos. 1—7), who are the principal defendants in the present case, and in support of his contention, he relies mainly upon the decision of this Court in the case reported as Bhola Singh v. Gurdit Singh (1). In that case, the plaintiff sued defendants for a declaration of title to a share in the offerings of a certain shrine, and his suit was dismissed upon the preliminary ground that it was not cognizable with reference to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as there was consequential relief which the plaintiff could have claimed and had not claimed. This decree having been affirmed on appeal, plaintiff instituted a subsequent suit claiming the consequential relief which he had omitted to claim in the first suit, and it was held by this Court that the second suit was not barred, either under section 13 or under section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Plowden, J., in his judgment, points out that in such cases, one of three courses may be adopted by the Court. In the first place, it may reject the plaint in limine, in which case it would clearly be open to plaintiffs to institute a fresh suit. In the next place, the Court may entertain the suit and adjudicate upon the matters in dispute. "In this case," the learned Judge remarks, "if the plaintiff institutes a second suit founded on the same cause of action and involving a claim omitted or relinquished in the first suit, or seeking a remedy not sought in the first suit, he brings himself directly within the operation of the final clauses of section 43. So far as the suit regards any relief claimed in the first suit and not granted by the decree, it is governed by section 13, Explanation III. As regards any portion of the claim omitted or relinquished or any remedy not sued for in the first suit, the suit is expressly prohibited by clauses 2 and 3 of section 43."

In the third place, the Court instead of rejecting the plaint entertains it, but eventually dismisses the suit as the plaint is defective in form, at the same time refusing to adjudicate upon the subject matter in dispute. In this case the learned Judge holds that the position of the plaintiff would be precisely the same as if his first suit had been rejected in limine. The learned Judge continues:—"The object of section 42 (i. e, Order II, rule 1) is not to prevent any litigation, but to prevent further litigation which can be avoided by a plaintiff duly framing the suit, so as to permit a final decision in a single suit. When in the first suit, there has been no decision at all on the subject-matter in dispute, the second suit is not further litigation within the meaning of section 42, and the second suit is, therefore, beyond the scope of the operation of the final clauses of section 43, even though the plaint may seek some remedy or contain some claim omitted ir or relinquished in the first plaint.

"The difference between the first and third cases supposed, namely, where the plaint is rejected and when the suit is dismissed, either order being passed on the same ground, is one of form and not of substance. The difference in the form of the order, provided that in each case the Court refuses to adjudicate upon the matter in dispute, seems to be immaterial. This difference cannot enlarge the scope of the operation of the final clauses in section 43, and these clauses, in my opinion, do not apply to either case. The object of these clauses is to prevent further litigation concerning the subject matter of dispute and there has been no previous litigation regarding the subject matter in dispute within the meaning of section 42 when the Court has refused to exercise its function by giving a decision between the litigants on the subject-matter in dispute. In either case, the plaintiff is, as it seeems to me, at liberty, section 43 notwithstanding, to commence proceedings de novo and that without any express permission."

Both learned Judges were of opinion that to such a case section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 had no applicability, and Elsmie, J., (while concurring generally with Plowden, J.), added that section 43 does not operate to prevent a man who has lost "a suit merely because it was brought in a wrong form from repairing his error and suing for the proper remedy."

In our opinion, this authority is directly in point and supports appellants' contention. In the former suit, their amended plaint distinctly asked for relief against all the three defendants but the Munsif held that the claim as against present defendants Nos. 1—7 must be dismissed because no cause of action was in express terms alleged against them. That he did not in any sense adjudicate upon the subject matter of dispute between plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1—7 is obvious from the fact that in his judgment he expressly stated that plaintiffs were at liberty to bring a fresh suit against these defendants, if so advised. The plea of res judicata in such a case is clearly untenable, for [as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Parsotam Gir v. Narbada Gir (2)], "it would be a contradiction in terms to say that a Court had finally decided matters which it expressly left untouched and undecided." The Munsif in the former suit would probably have rejected the plaint so far as defendants Nos. 1—7 were concerned, had he not been placed in a dilemma. Some of the defendants had compromised matters with plaintiffs and consequently a decree, based on the compromise, had to be passed, and the Munsif obviously felt the difficulty of rejecting a plaint, upon which, so far as some defendants were concerned, he had perforce to pass a decree. He could not, in other words, both accept and reject the plaint and in this position of difficulty, he endeavoured to do justice to all parties by passing a decree against the defendants who had come to terms with plaintiffs and by dismissing the suit against the other defendants, granting plaintiffs at the same time liberty to sue the latter de novo. Admittedly, the Munsif did not attempt to adjudicate upon the subject-matter of dispute between plaintiffs and the latter defendants and, in the circumstances, we hold, upon the authorities above cited, that the present suit is not barred either under section 11 or under Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. We accordingly accept the appeal and under Order XLI, rule 23, we remand the case to the Divisional Judge for decision of the appeal before him. Court-fee stamp to be refunded, and costs to abide the event.

Appeal accepted.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Presumption that the family has capital for money-lending—Presumption that business carried on by a co-parcener is a family business—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Patwari prohibited from lending money—Mortgage in favour of Patwari opposed to public policy.

There is no presumption that a joint family has capital for money-lending and no presumption that a business carried on by a co-parcener is a family business.

Where by statute a penalty for doing or omitting any act is imposed solely or partly for the protection of the public, such act or omission is impliedly prohibited by the statute and is illegal.

Therefore, a mortgage in favour of a Patwari, who, under the Revenue rules, is liable to dismissal for money-lending, is void as being opposed to public policy.

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, dated the 20th October 1910, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, dated the 30th June 1910.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. K. Padhye, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure based upon a mortgage by conditional sale, executed in July 1895, in favour of Jaikrishna, brother of the plaintiff Vithal. The property mortgaged consists of two absolute occupancy fields in the circle of which Jaikrishna was patwari. Jaikrishna died in or about the year 1900. According to the plaint, Vithal and Jaikrishna were members of a joint family when the latter died and Vithal became his brother's heir. In the pleadings, this description was amended, Vithal being said to claim by survivorship. The defendants alleged that Jaikrishna and Vithal were separate and that the proper person to sue was the former's widow. The main defence, however, was that the contract was void as being opposed to public policy, and this point has been decided in the defendants' favour by both the Courts below. Their decision is based upon the rules relating to patwaris which were made by the Chief Commissioner under sections 144 and 146 of the Land Revenue Act, 1881, and will be found in Central Provinces Gazette Notification No. 4604, dated the 18th September 1884, as amended by No. 6009, dated the 23rd September 1890, and No. 7192, dated the 13th October 1891.

In appeal to this Court, the plaintiff urges that the mortgage transaction was really one to which the joint family consisting of Ramchandra, Jaikrishna, Vithal and two others since dead were parties. For this contention, I can find no proper basis in the plaint, the pleadings or the evidence. The mere fact—if it be a fact—that Jaikrishna was member of a joint family in 1895 does not show that any lending done in his name was done by or on behalf of the joint family. There is no presumption that a joint family has capital for money-lending and no presumption that a business carried on by a co-parcener is a family business: see Vadilal v. Shah Khushal (1). Nor does the plaintiff's evidence show that the family possessed a nucleus of joint property. In these circumstances, I think it must be taken that the lending was done by Jaikrishna alone for his own benefit.

Next, it is urged that failing a declaration in the Notifications cited to the effect that a transaction of loan or mortgage is void, such a transaction cannot be regarded as illegal. To this the answer is that where by a statute a penalty for doing or omitting any act is imposed solely or partly for the protection of the public, such act or omission is impliedly prohibited by the statute and is illegal; see Victorian Daylesford Syndicate v. Dott (2), approved and followed by the Court of Appeal in Bonnard v. Dott (3). No doubt in No. III* of the rules in question the expression that no person shall be "allowed to work as a patwari" is consistent with the retention by him of his post. But I agree entirely with the learned Divisional Judge in his interpretation of rule XIV†, which shows that dismissal would necessarily follow on disobedience of the prohibition against lending money, unless the transaction was cancelled within a time allowed for the purpose. As stated in Shiam Lal v Chhaki Lal (4), no patwari can do his duty properly if he has a direct interest in property in his circle. It is equally undesirable for the same reason that he should occupy the position of a lender, which must inevitably lead to his devoting part of his time to dunning and suing debtors.

In my opinion, the contract has rightly been pronounced illegal under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below, costs will be borne as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom — Pre-emption — Dasuha town, District Hushiarpur.

The custom of pre-emption, in respect of house property, obtains in the town of Dasuha.

Rai Sahib Pundit Sheo Narain, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dial, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A return has now been received to my order of remand, dated the 16th March 1910. The learned Divisional Judge has discussed in chronological order 15 instances in which the custom of pre-emption in respect of house property was held to exist in the town of Dasuha, and his opinion is that the custom is fully established. In summing up the result of the inquiry in the concluding portion of his return, he says:—

"In cases (1), (3), (6) and (12), the point of custom was in dispute, and the custom was in each case found to exist. There is no case in which a decision has been given against the existence of the custom. In cases (4), (5), (7) to (10) and in (14), the custom was admitted. In case (15), the precedent of No. 12 was followed, and the custom was found to exist throughout the town. In case (1), moreover, it was found that there had been instances before 1869 in which the pre-emptors had stepped in."

The learned Advocate for the respondents is obliged to concede that there is overwhelming evidence on the record of the existence of the custom of pre emption in Dasuha, and he has, therefore, refrained from addressing me on behalf of his clients with a view to shew that the return submitted by the Divisional Judge is not based on correct data. I, therefore, hold that the custom of pre-emption in respect of house property does exist in the town of Dasuha, and I, accordingly, accept this appeal and, setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, send the case back for a fresh decision under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code.

The stamp on this appeal will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Case remanded.

KISHAN—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2)—Decree—Preliminary decree—Decision on preliminary issues—No decree drawn up—Remedy of aggrieved party—Appeal.

A judgment under the Civil Procedure Code is only the basis of a decree or order. The decree which itself is the formal expression of the judgment, is, and the order may or may not be, appealable, but the judgment itself gives no right of appeal.

The drawing up of a decree is a conscious and formal act, whereby the Court notifies its disposal of matter in controversy in accordance with its adjudication thereupon; and no right of appeal arises until such decree has been drawn up.

In certain cases, the passing of a preliminary decree is imperative but in other cases, it is a matter within the discretion of the Court. But unless a preliminary adjudication is finally expressed by a decree, or followed by an appealable order, no right of appeal can arise.

In a redemption suit brought by sons of a Hindu to redeem a mortgage, which had already been foreclosed by a decree against their father, the mortgagee pleaded, inter alia, that he had no notice of the plaintiffs' interest at the time of bringing his foreclosure suit, that the foreclosure decree was binding on the plaintiffs, and that the father of the plaintiffs was the managing member of his family. The Court framed preliminary issues on the above points and found against the defendant. No formal decree was drawn up:

Held, that the decision of the Court on the preliminary issues was not a preliminary decree, and, therefore, was not appealable.

Obiter.—If a Court, having written a judgment, which should be followed by a decree, fails to draw up such decree, the remedy of the party who wants that decree, whether for appeal or execution, is to apply for it, and, if it is refused, to move the High Court in revision. But until the decree has been drawn up, there can be neither appeal nor execution.

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Nerbudda Division, dated the 12th May 1911, confirming that of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 13th March 1911.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Mittra and Rao Bahadur V. R. Pandit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises, the plaintiffs are the sons of one Dhuria Gaoli. They sue to redeem a mortgage executed by their father in favour of the defendant. Upon this mortgage, the defendant has already obtained a foreclosure decree in a suit against the father alone. The plaintiffs claim that this decree does not bind them owing to the defendant's failure to comply with the provisions of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1832.

The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that he had no notice of the plaintiffs' interest at the time of bringing his foreclosure suit, that the decree is binding on the plaintiffs, and that Dhuria was the managing member of his family. The first Court (District Court of Chhindwara) framed three preliminary issues, thus:—

> "(1) Whether the defendant had notice of the existence of the present plaintiffs at the date of his suit?
> (2) Does the decree in the previous suit against the plaintiffs' father bind them?
> (3) Was the father of the plaintiffs the manager of the joint property?"

The object of trying out these preliminary issues was to ascertain whether the suit was tenable before entering upon the mortgage accounts. The learned District Judge found,—

(1) that the defendant had notice of the plaintiffs' interest when he sued out foreclosure;

(2) that the foreclosure decree is not, therefore, binding on the plaintiffs; and

(3) that plaintiffs' father was the manager of the family property at the time of the foreclosure suit.

In consequence of these findings, the first Court framed further issues and made the following entry in its order sheet of the 13th March 1911:—

> "Plaintiffs by their Pleader.
> "Defendant in person.
> "Findings on preliminary issue delivered.
> "Issues framed and explained. For evidence 26th June 1911.
> "Process-fees within four days."

No formal decree of any kind was drawn up in accordance with the above findings. The defendant appealed to the Divisional Court against the findings, and the learned Divisional Judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that, as the findings constituted neither a decree nor an appealable order, no appeal lay against them.

The defendant has now made this second appeal, and it is urged that the findings constitute a preliminary decree, because, so far as regards the first Court, they conclusively determine the rights of the parties in respect of the matters in controversy to which they refer. This raises the much discussed question as to the definition of a decree. It cannot be disputed that, owing to the infirmities of language, it is not always easy to say what is, and what is not, an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in a suit. But such an adjudication is not by itself the decree. It is really a judgment which constitutes the basis of the decree; and from the definition given of the word "judgment" in the Code of Civil Procedure, it is clear that their can be no decree without a judgment. But the decree itself is the formal expression of the judgment. In the very recent case of Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1), a Full Bench has considered and defined what is a "judgment" under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and the gist of the ruling is that it is not the form, but the effect, of the adjudication in the suit or proceeding in which it is made, that affords the test by which it can be found to be, or not to be, a judgment. That is a test which may serve equally well in deciding upon what is, and what is not, a judgment as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure. But, so far as the Full Bench dictum has reference to a judgment which gives a right of appeal under the Letters Patent, it has no application to the present case. A judgment under the Civil Procedure Code is only the basis of a decree or order. The decree is, and the order may or may not be, appealable; but the judgment of itself gives no right of appeal. In the creation of a decree, form is of the first importance. As I read the present Code, nothing can be a decree which the Court passing it does not expressly intend to be so. Every decision requires some consequential order: in some cases, the order is merely processual; in others, it is interlocutory; in others, where it involves some finality, or something which makes immediate appellate consideration expedient, an appeal from it is expressly allowed by the Code: and the eventual order, disposing of the suit, or of a well recognized stage or division of the suit, and drawn up in a formal manner is the decree. So far as the final decree is concerned, the question of definition presents little difficulty. But complexity can be easily introduced into the identification of a preliminary decree by juggling with the language of the definition of "decree" given in the Civil Procedure Code. That difficulty will always be present while the view prevails—if it does prevail—that a Court may unconsciously pass a decree and give a right of appeal, even though it does not intend its decision to be a decree, and does not, therefore, employ the form necessary for a legal embodiment of the particular decree with which it is credited. I am not in favour of this view. In my opinion, as already stated, the drawing up of a decree is a conscious and formal act, whereby the Court notifies its disposal of matter in controversy in accordance with its adjudication thereupon, and no right of appeal arises until such decree has been drawn up. If a Court, having written a judgment which should be followed by a decree, fails to draw up such decree, the remedy of the party who wants that decree, whether for appeal or execution, is to apply for it, and, if it is refused, to move the High Court in revision. But until the decree has been drawn, there can be neither appeal nor execution. This view obviously commended itself to the Bombay High Court in the very recent case of Bai Divali v. Vishnav Manordas (2), though it must be conceded that it is not easy to understand how, after this, the same High Court came to the conclusion it did in Krishnaji v. Maruti (3), in which a formal finding was treated as a preliminary decree. It is clear that, as regards the final decree, the Court has no option. Section 33 of the Code clearly refers to the final disposal of a suit by the Court trying it, and it is imperatively laid down that such disposal shall be by a judgment followed by a decree. Then, there are certain cases where the passing of a preliminary decree is made equally imperative, e.g., under Order XX, rule 13 or Order XXXIV, rule 2. But, for the most part, and except where expressly made imperative, the passing of a preliminary decree is a matter within the discretion of the Court. Where the Court passes such a decree, an appeal will lie against it, and the provisions of section 97 of the Code will apply. But where any preliminary adjudication is not formally expressed by such a decree, or followed by an appealable order, no right of appeal can arise.

In the present case, the findings of the District Court constitute a judgment, but no decree in accordance with that judgment was ever drawn up. The only consequential order passed was one that the suit should proceed to the further stages of its trial. This is not an appealable order. Therefore, there is at present no right of appeal in respect of the points adjudicated upon. In ordinary course, the only preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff which can be passed is a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 7. If the findings on the preliminary issues had gone in favour of the defendant, they would have constituted the final judgment of the Court, and formed the basis of a final decree dismissing the suit. In favour of the plaintiffs, they amount to only a fractional part of the judgment referred to in Order XX, rule 1 of the Code, and they need not yet be given formal expression by means of a decree. They are a foundation partially laid for a decree to be drawn up hereafter when the other points calling for judgment have been tried and decided. There is nothing which has yet called section 97 of the Civil Procedure Code into operation, and the defendant will be hereafter entitled to question these findings, so far as they are adverse to him, if and when he appeals from any decree which may be founded upon them so as to be the formal expression of the adjudication which they involve.

This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. I allow two sovereigns as Pleader's fees in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

REVENUE APPEAL No. 4 OF 1911-12.

March 27, 1912.

AHMAD—APPELLANT

versus

AHMAD—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), ss. 15 (1) (a) & (3), 118 (3) & (4)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2(14)—Sanction to review, whether an order—Review—Revision—Appeal—Partition, permission to withdraw application for—Discretion—Circumstances.

An order passed on review is appealable, provided that it does not merely confirm the previous order. A mere sanction, however, given by a controlling to a Subordinate Revenue Officer to review an order is not in itself an "order" and is, therefore, not appealable, though it may be open to revision.

Where a Revenue Officer allowed an application for partition to be withdrawn, because numerous irregularities had occurred in the conduct of partition proceedings and the original second party had alienated his share to other persons, who represented him in the proceeding:

Held, that the Revenue Officer had exercised a sound discretion in allowing the withdrawal of the application, and that no action, under section 118 (4), Land Revenue Act, was necessary, because there was no applicant other than the first party who had been permitted to withdraw his application.

Appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 5th September 1911.

ORDER.—I concur in the substantial justice of the Commissioner's order and, for the reasons and on the grounds which are mentioned below, I propose to give effect to it; but there has been a technical irregularity in the procedure which it is necessary to notice. I think that a sanction to review given under section 15 (1) (a), Land Revenue Act, is not an "order" and is, therefore, not appealable. There is an appeal from a review, i. e., from an order passed in review, provided that it is not an order confirming on review a previous order, vide section 15 (3), Land Revenue Act. It would be anomalous to treat as subject to appeal the mere granting of permission to undertake the review procedure when, as sometimes happens, the order resulting from such procedure may be one which under section 15 (3) is not appealable. An order is, in section 2 (14) of the Civil Procedure Code, defined as "the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree." It does not appear to me, having regard to this definition, that the sanction given by a controlling to a subordinate Revenue Officer to review an order is in itself an order. If this view be correct, it follows that the action of the Commissioner was premature and that no appeal lay to his Court so long as the sanction given by the Collector had not been acted upon. He could, of course, have taken up the case on the revision side.

The case having now come before me, I find it to be one in which an applicant for partition desires to withdraw his application. Under section 118 (3), Land Revenue Act, it is within the discretion of the Revenue Officer to allow withdrawal. In the circumstances of the present case, it is right and proper to allow the application of the first party (Ahmad, son of Manga), more especially as numerous irregularities have occurred in the conduct of the case, and also because the original second party, Tahir, has alienated his share to the persons who now represent the second party. No action is necessary under section 118 (4), Land Revenue Act, because there is no other "applicant" than the first party. My order, therefore, is that the proceedings be consigned to the Record-Room. The second party can, at any time, file a fresh application for partition when proceedings would commence de novo.

RAJABKHAN—APPLICANT

versus

LANGDAJI—NON-APPLICANT.

Small Cause Court—Record of evidence—Judgment—Procedure.

The reason why the Judge of a Small Cause Court, is not required to record more than a brief memorandum of the substance of the evidence given before him, or to give any reasons for his judgment on that evidence, is that the law pre-supposes a prompt and continuous trial, usually finished in one hearing, followed by an immediate decision while the evidence of both sides, most of it unrecorded, is still fresh in all its details in the mind of the Judge. This is of the very essence of the Small Cause Court procedure.

Where the judgment in a case was delivered by a Small Cause Court Judge seven months after he had heard the evidence in the case and the record of evidence was very incomplete and imperfect:

Held, that his judgment was without the basis necessary for a legal decision, and, therefore, a re-trial should be ordered.

Revision against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amraoti, dated the 20th March 1911.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Non-applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was instituted in a Court of Small Causes on a bond purporting to be executed by two brothers (1) Wailaji and (2) Langdaji. The plaint was filed on the 1st July 1910, the amount claimed being Rs. 775 8 0. Wailaji filed a written statement pleading that execution of the bond had been obtained from him by physical force and wrongful confinement, and that Langdaji had not executed the deed. The substance of this statement is reproduced in the Trial Register, apparently as the statement of the 2nd defendant. The case was set down for final disposal, and the parties and one witness for each were examined on the 24th August 1910. The Judge then recorded "defendants given one more chance to produce their evidence. Case for 8-11." The date intended was 8th November 1910. On that date, the Judge had no time for this case, and an adjournment was ordered to the 20th March 1911, when some utterly useless witnesses for the defence were examined, and the claim decreed against Wailaji, but dismissed against Langdaji on the ground that proof of execution by him was not satisfactory. The plaintiffs have applied for revision against Langdaji on the ground that the evidence of their witness has been incompletely recorded and misconceived. It appears that the scribe and one attesting witness are dead, and W. P. No. 1 was the surviving attesting witness. The record made of his evidence was incomplete and imperfect, a palpable contradiction being left unexplained. But the Judge of a Small Cause Court is not required to record more than a brief memorandum for his own guidance of the substance of the evidence given before him. He is also not required to give any reasons for his judgment on that evidence. But in making these provisions, the law pre-supposes a prompt and continuous trial, usually finished in one hearing, followed by an immediate decision while the evidence of both sides, most of it unrecorded, is still fresh in all its details in the mind of the Judge. This is of the very essence of Small Cause Court procedure. In the present case, the Judge delivered judgment seven months after he had heard the only evidence relevant to the case, and as he could not possibly have carried in his mind anything which does not appear in his memorandum of that evidence, the judgment is without the basis necessary for legal decisions in a Small Cause Court. I, therefore, reverse the decree and order a re-trial. I make no order as to the costs of this revision.

Custom—Inheritance - Applicability of custom or of Muhammadan Law to Bara Mohmands of Chamkani, Peshawar District.

Bara Mohmands of the village of Chamkani in the Peshawar District are governed in matters of inheritance by custom and not by Muhammadan Law.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Peshawar, dated the 2nd January 1912.

Mufti Muhammad Yakub, for the Respondents.

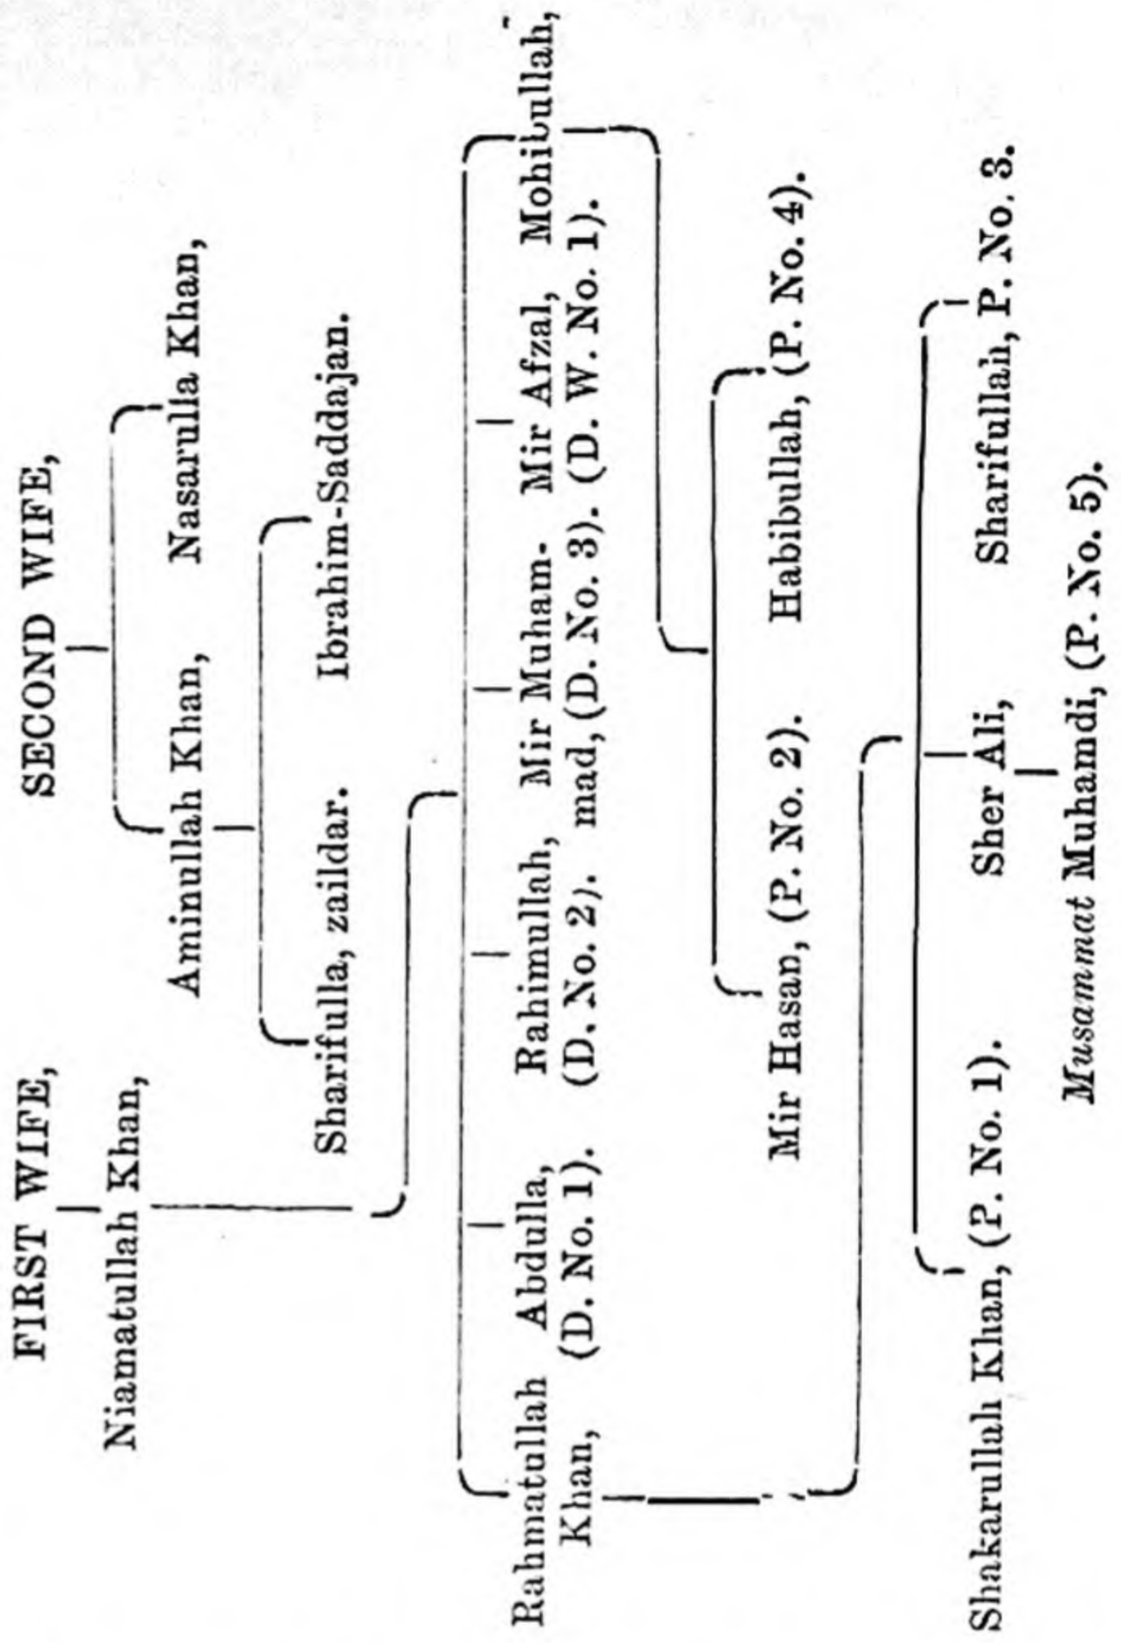
JUDGMENT.—The pedigree-table of the parties in this case is as follows:—



The parties to the present suit are Bara Mohmands of the village of Chamkani in the Peshawar District. Th pedigree-table above given illustrates their relationship. The claim was for a 2/5ths share in the land owned by Niamatullah Khan, ancestor of the parties. It was resisted on the ground that the family of the parties is bound by Muhammadan Law in matters of inheritance, and as the fathers of the plaintiffs predeceased Niamatullah, the inheritance devolved in its entirety on the surviving sons of the latter to the exclusion of his grandsons. This contention was traversed by plaintiffs, who alleged that the custom usually followed in the Mohmand Tappa governed the devolution of property by inheritance in their family. The District Judge who tried the suit held that the family had adopted the Muhammadan Law in matters of succession and dismissed the suit. The Divisional Judge on appeal concurred in this finding, while holding that in Chamkani village, the proprietary body followed custom generally to the exclusion of the Muhammadan Law.

It may be accepted as practically axiomatic that agricultural tribes in this Province are bound by custom in matters of succession and the onus of proving that a different rule is followed must, in ordinary circumstances, lie on the person asserting the rule. As regards the Bara Mohmands, it is interesting to note that in 1871 a preference was expressed by the tribe for Muhammadan Law as opposed to custom; but by 1895, a change of feeling had asserted itself, and the Riwaj-i-am of the Mohmands generally is now in line with the general Customary law of the Peshawar District as given in Lorimer's Compilation. In fact the attitude taken up in 1871 never received concrete expression except in a few sporadic cases, and there can be little doubt that the members of the tribe were at the time influenced by ecclesiastic forces or perhaps by the abnormal bigotry of the few of the leading men. The position being as above described, the ordinary presumption is that plaintiff's family follows the general rule of the tribe [Sayad Rahim Shah v. Sayad Hussain Shah(1) and Kartar Singh v. Mathar Singh(2)]. This presumption can, however, be rebutted, and if there is prima facie reason for holding that a particular family usually follows its personal law in preference to custom, the onus of proving that custom is still adhered to would lie on the party asserting it. On the whole, in the present case, I think the presumption is in favour of custom, and the main question for determination is whether the defendants have established the contrary rule. In the first place, there is the definite assertion of Amirullah, one of the elders of the family, in 1871 in favour of Muhammadan Law. It is further alleged that the land in suit was gifted by Arsalah Khan to Niamatullah, his son, in accordance with the provisions of the Shariat. The assertion will not, however, stand the test of criticism. The gift which was made over 60 years ago does not profess to have been made expressly in accordance with Muhammadan Law. The assertion that the sacred law would defeat any one who should dare to oppose the gift is a stereotyped phrase and conveys little more than a pious wish. Next comes the statement of Shakurullah Khan, plaintiff, dated 20th July 1910, before Muhammad Khan, Munsif 1st class, Peshawar, in the course of the trial of the case between Azim Khan and Musammat Daurana, widow of Sheikh Amir, to the effect that his family followed the Muhammadan Law. It may be noted in parenthesis that custom was found to be the rule of decision in that case. No appeal was presented from the Munsif's finding. The parties belonged to Chamkani, but it is not shown that they were related to the family of the parties. This statement is not, I think, of much value in evidence. Section 31, Evidence Act, lays down that admissions are not conclusive proof, but may operate as estoppels. Now it is an essential element of the doctrine of estoppel (section 115, Evidence Act) that to bring the principle into operation, the declaration, act or omission alleged in estoppel must have had the effect of causing some other person to act thereon, and it is further provided that the consequences must have been intended. Now, it is not alleged that any such consequences have resulted from the statement of Shakurullah, and it follows that there is nothing in the nature of estoppel in his conduct. Further, the statement has to be regarded as a whole, and it is distinctly qualified by the assertion that in a particular case in the family of the parties, viz., Sharifullah's wife and daughters, Muhammadan Law was not strictly followed, and in the end these women merely received a share of the produce of the land of Sharifullah; in other words, custom rather than Muhammadan Law was observed. In these circumstances, Shakurullah's statement cannot be held to have much probative force. Most emphasis is perhaps laid on the decided cases in the family of the parties and these will now be noticed briefly:—

(1) Musammat Aiman v. Gulab Khan, Pathan. This was not a judicial case, but arose out of mutation proceedings. Shariat was followed, but there does not appear to have been a full inquiry, and the result is of little value. Apparently, too, the parties were only remotely connected with the plaintiffs' family. The Revenue Officers, moreover, were, it would appear, influenced by the now discredited statement of the Riwaj in 1871.

(2) Musammat Hawa Jan v. Ata Jan. In this case, the Rule of 1871, was followed by the Assistant Judicial Commissioner, but the issue of law and custom was not fully investigated, and there was no appeal.

(3) No. 3 of 1909 of Chamkani. This was a mutation case. The inquiry was defective throughout and did not go up on appeal to the Revenue Commissioner. Moreover, the shares respectively assigned to the step-son and widow were not according to Muhammadan Law.

(4) Badr-ud-din v. Musammat Khanam Jan and Musammat Begum. The defendants in this case were widows of Qamr-ud-din, maternal uncle of Shakurullah Khan. Badr-ud-din was son of Qamr-ud-din. The dispute was about a house belonging to Qamr-ud-din. The house was left conditionally with the widow. The records are somewhat vague, but this much is clear that the widow's possession was in accordance with a family arrangement, and more weight appears to have been given to custom than to Muhammadan Law.

(5) Musammat Sada Jan v. Sharifullah. This case went up to the Chief Court (No. 1566 of 1887). In this case, Muhammadan Law was specifically followed. Defendant admitted in his pleas that such law was the personal law of his family and by consent the case was decided by Shariat. There was no inquiry as to whether Sharifullah's statement was correct.

Finally, it is alleged for defendants that the house in which Shakurullah is living was inherited from his mother, who acquired it by operation of the Muhammadan Law of inheritance.

On the other hand, it is argued that had Muhammadan Law been candidly and wholeheartedly adopted by the family, the operation of the law would have been clearly reflected in the present conditions of ownership of the family land, whereas this is not the case. No judicial instances peculiar to the family are asserted in which custom was followed, the case Musammat Momna v. Abdulla Khan (defendant in the case) not being in point, as Abdulla Khan was sued in his capacity as morrgagee of alien land.

Passing on to consider the effect of the evidence, I think it may be conceded that within the last half century, there has been in the family of the parties at least an inclination to substitute Muhammadan Law for custom, but this has hardly amounted to a tendency; and it is beyond question that there has been no definite and final adoption of the Islamic Law in preference to tribal rules. This is clear enough from the fact that since the declaration of 1871, the devolution of property has not uniformly followed the principles of Shariat. There have, it is true, been occasions when the Muhammadan Law has operated in matters of succession, but these are too few and unimportant to establish a rule. The value of the decided cases has been criticised in a preceding paragraph, and it cannot be asserted that they form a sufficient basis for the theory of defendants. Shakurullah's statement, as already shown, is of little use as evidence; and it was probably not intended to do more than indicate a preference in the family for the rule of the Shariat. In existing conditions, as above shown, it cannot be said that the family has definitely divorced itself from custom, and custom must, therefore, be held to govern their relations at the present time. I accordingly reverse the finding of the Divisional Judge on the issue under discussion. The question as to the share to which plaintiffs are entitled by custom has not been decided in the Divisional Court, nor has the point as to whether defendants have proved that they have a set off in the funeral expenses they allege they have paid. I accept the appeal on the point of custom and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the issues just referred to. Stamp on appeal to be refunded. In the circumstances of the case, the parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

JANGI v. DALIPA.

After passing a final decree, a Court cannot extend the period fixed by the decree for the doing of any act.

Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Ajudhya Prasad, 5 Ind. Cas. 443; 13 O.C. 28; Bibi Sharofun v. Mahomed Habib-ud-din, 15 C. W. N. 685 at p. 690; 10 Ind. Cas. 148; 13 C. L. J. 535, relied upon.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Shahpur, dated 30th October 1909, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Shahpur, dated 1st July 1909, rejecting the appellants' petition for execution of a decree.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration is whether section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers a Court to extend the period fixed by a decree passed on a compromise for the payment of a sum of money, as a condition for the cancellation of a lease, the penalty for the failure to pay within the period fixed being dismissal of the suit with costs. The lower Appellate Court held that the period, which had expired before its enlargement was sought, could be enlarged. Counsel for the appellants has cited Bibi Sharofun v. Mahomed Habibuddin(1) and Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Ajudhya Prasad(2) as authority for the proposition that section 148 does not apply to periods fixed by a decree. In Bibi Sharofan v. Mahomed Habibuddin (1), the judgment runs:—

"We may add that, at one stage of the proceedings, we were inclined to make an order for the reversal of the sale under rule 89 of Order XXI of the Code. We are unable to do so, however, because under rule 92, sub-rule 2, the deposit must be made within thirty days from the date of sale, and we have no power, either under section 5 of the Limitation Act, or under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, to enlarge the time. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that the appeal to the District Judge was competent and that no grounds have been established for our interference with his order in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction."

In the case of Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Ajudhya Prasad (2), a Division Bench of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court, of whom one member has officiated in the Allahabad High Court, held that the general provisions of section 148 related only to proceedings antecedent to the passing of a final decree and were never intended to give a Court power to alter the terms of a decree already passed, the decree being unalterable except under the provisions of section 152 or Order XX, rule 3 or those relating to review of judgment or special provisions of a similar nature under the alteration.

As remarked by Mr. Justice Johnstone, who admitted this appeal, the Court passing the decree was functus officio as an original Court and the general rule is that no executing Court can vary a decree except by consent of parties.

I concur in the decisions cited which conclude the question under consideration and decree the appeal with costs.

Appeal decreed.

Regulation XI of 1825—Alluvion and diluvion—Occupancy-holding re appearing after submersion—Occupancy-tenant, whether loses his right to recovered land—Custom—Agreement in contravention of custom—Consideration—Onus of proof of custom.

The general custom in the Punjab is that an occupancy-tenant does not lose his right by reason of the land of his holding being submerged. Therefore, he has the same rights after alluviation as he had before diluviation of the holding. If a custom to the contrary is alleged, it must be very strictly proved by the landlord.

The Wajib-ul-arz of a village recorded an agreement that occupancy-tenants will have no right to land re-appearing after being carried away by the stream:

Held, that the entry was inoperative, because,

(1) the agreement was void for want of consideration:

(2) the parties to the agreement, who were subject to the Customary Law in alluvion and diluvion matters, were not at liberty to enter into a contract providing that they and their descendants shall not in future be subject to that rule of decision.

Petition for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Jullundur Division, dated the 11th November 1911.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are given in the following extract from the judgment of the Collector who reversed, on appeal, the decree of the first Court :—

"Briefly, the suit is for the possession of land amounting to 28 kanals, 12 marals on the ground that by reason of its having been encroached upon by the bed of a torrent, the defendants who are now in possession have no longer rights of occupancy as they originally had, and as they have again recently taken possession, they are now liable to ejectment. The lower Court has found that the defendants took possession again as soon as they could and that the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz is inoperative. Against this order, the plaintiffs appeal. On examining the record, I find it alleged in the plaint that the land in question has been subject to the action of the khad or torrent and not to that of the Sohan stream. There are separate alluvion-diluvion rules as to these streams. The wajib-ul-arz lays down as follows :—

"On behalf of tenants it is written :—

'When the land of any occupancy-tenant is engulfed, he will bear the loss if it is less than 5 per cent. ghumaos of the tenancy. When more than 5 per cent. ghumaos of the tenancy is engulfed, the tenant will receive compensation (or reduction of rent-mujrai) from the owner. We will have no further right to the land if recovered. And in the event of our not receiving any compensation (or reduction of rent) by reason of the slight nature of the damage, we will maintain our (tenancy) rights in the land if recovered.' * * *

"There seems no reason for not applying the terms of the wajib-ul-arz to the present case. It is a formal agreement signed by both parties at the time of the settlement."

The Collector accordingly held that the defendants were liable to ejectment and this finding was upheld by the Commissioner on appeal. The present application for revision has been made to this Court by the defendants. The Collector's decision practically amounts to a finding that the defendants are bound by the agreement to which their predecessors in the occupancy-tenancy were parties in 1869, when the wajib-ul-arz containing the entry cited by the Collector was drawn up. Now there are two reasons for holding that the defendants are not bound by this agreement. The first is that the agreement was without consideration. Under it, the tenants consented to abandon a valuable right—the right to resume possession of their occupancy lands when restored by alluvion. This right has been established by a series of rulings of the Chief Court and in Sir L. Tupper's Ruling, published as Roshan v. Pohlo (1), it is declared to be the general rule of the Punjab. It may be argued that the remission by the landlord of the rent payable in respect of the diluviated land was the consideration for the tenants' promise not to claim the land on re-appearance. But under section 14 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1868, the tenants had a statutory right to abatement of rent in respect of any areas included in the tenancy that might be diluviated, and, therefore, a promise to allow tenants the benefit of a statutory right which they already possessed cannot be regarded as a consideration for the tenants' promise. Under section 25 of the Contract Act, an agreement made without consideration is void.

But the main reason for treating the agreement recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 as inoperative in the present case, is the legal one that questions of alluvion and diluvion are governed by custom or by statute, and parties are not at liberty to enter into agreements binding on future generations by which a different rule of decision shall be made applicable. Under Regulation XI of 1825, the rule of decision in alluvion and diluvion cases is declared to be firstly, custom, secondly, the provisions of the Regulation where they apply, and thirdly, "general principles of equity and justice." In this connection Rama v. Shere Singh (2), may be referred to. I know of no provision of law which would empower parties who are subject to Customary Law in alluvion and diluvion matters to enter into a contract providing that they and their descendants shall not in future be subject to that rule of decision. An Act of Legislature (Descent of Jagirs Act) was necessary to enable a person subject to the ordinary Customary Law of succession to introduce a rule of primogeniture or descent to a single heir. Similarly statutory provisions have been found necessary in the Colony Bill for the purpose of enabling tenants to dispose of their property otherwise than in accordance with their Customary Law. A still more relevant illustration of the principle under discussion is available. Legislation—the Punjab Riverain Boundaries Act of 1899—was necessary to overrule the provisions of the Regulation of 1825 in so far as it made custom and usage the rule of decision in cases affecting the boundaries of estates. Accordingly, I must hold that the rule of decision in the present case is custom, and that the agreement recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 cannot prevail if it be looked upon merely as an agreement. But, it may be argued, the entry in the wajib ul-arz, besides being an agreement, is evidence of custom. In form, the entry does not purport to be a statement as to custom. There is no assertion that the forfeiture of rights by the occupancy-tenants is an incident of existing tenure. It is the future tense that is used. Nothing in the language of the agreement justifies our regarding it as a statement of current custom. At the previous Settlement of 1859, a wajib-ul-arz was also prepared, but it contains no entry corresponding to that now under consideration. There is no evidence that prior to 1869, the practice was in accordance with the unusual conditions inserted in the wajib-ul-arz of that year.

The question of onus of proof as to custom arises here. In Roshan v. Pohlo (1) already referred to, Sir L. Tupper says: "I hold that the general rule in the Punjab is that an occupancy-tenant does not lose his right by reason of the land of his holding being submerged. A custom to the contrary may be proved, but such a custom is plainly inequitable and very strict proof of it should be required before it is acted upon." It is impossible for reasons explained above to hold that an agreement looking to the future amounts to "very strict proof" of a custom which, like all customs, should have some root in past practice. Nor have the plaintiffs otherwise discharged the obligation to furnish "very strict proof" in support of their contention. They have cited one similar case in which in another village the Collector gave a decree in favour of the landlord on a similar cause of action. The Collector was the same officer (Col. Egerton) who dealt with the present case in the first instance, and the view which he took was, as in the present case, based on the sanctity of the wajib-ul-arz agreement. On the other hand, there is a mass of evidence in decided cases to the effect that occupancy-tenants are entitled to recover diluviated land. In his judgment, dated 28th August 1900, in a tahsil Una case, Nihal Chand v. Jhalla, S. Aziz Din, Extra Assistant Commissioner, remarks that out of 27 plots of land restored by the hill torrent, 24 had been recovered by the occupancy-tenants notwithstanding an entry in the wajib-ul-arz to the effect that occupancy-tenants had no concern with alluviated land. In another case, Lachman of Mauza Basal, tahsil Una, v. Gulaba, in which the wajib ul-arz contained an entry to the effect that when land under the possession of occupancy-tenants is rendered unfit for cultivation by the Cho or Sohan stream, the occupancy rights of the tenants therein cease to exist, Mr. Fagan, the Collector, in his judgment, dated 25th July 1901, which was given in favour of the occupancy-tenants, noted, that in at least 58 cases in the village, occupancy-tenants had, contrary to the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz recovered possession of land on its re-appearance after having been carried away by the stream. All indications seem to point to the conclusion that the provisions regarding forfeiture of occupancy rights contrary to the general custom of the Punjab, which found a place in the wajib-ul-arz of so many villages of the Una tahsil in 1869, were inserted without due care and attention in a routine manner—probably at the instance of interested landowners.

In view of all the foregoing considerations, I must hold that the plaintiffs in this case have failed to discharge the onus which lay heavily upon them of proving a special custom, contrary to the general custom of the Province, entitling them to treat as irrecoverable by their occupancy-tenants land carried away by torrent action and subsequently restored. I accordingly, under section 84 (5) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, direct that the plaintiffs' suit be dismissed, with costs to the defendants against the plaintiffs throughout.

Revision accepted.

An application to a Court to exercise its powers under Order XXI, rule 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is an application for the execution of a decree and as regards limitation is governed by Article 182 of the 2nd Schedule of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

ORIGINAL SIDE JUDGMENT.

In a decree passed in C. R. No. 63 of 1899, Pokermull Ramrickdas, Premsookhdass Bhujaj, Govindram Mon, the then trustees and managers of the Hindu temple of Seth Narain, were restrainedfrom continuing the erection of the building, (known as No. 8, Mogul Street) in such a way as to obstruct or diminish the access of light and air to certain windows in No. 7, Mogul Street. The result has been that No. 8, Mogul Street, was left as it was, a ground floor building and these windows retained an unobstructed access of light and air over the roof of No. 8. In 1910, however, the trustees commenced to build again and there was now existent a wall of some 15 inches in height running east and west along the flat roof of No. 8 at a distance of some eleven feet from the protected windows which applicants claim to be a breach of this injunction and they have accordingly applied that the injunction may be enforced.

It has been objected by Mr. Giles, on behalf of the trustees, that this is an application for the execution of the decree within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act, that it is barred in that it has not been made within any of the periods prescribed thereby. Mr. Giles was unable to adduce any authority in support of his contention and admitted that the reported cases were against him, and that the effect of his contention would be in the case of a Chief Court to limit the duration of a so-called perpetual injunction to three years, but relied upon the wording of the article in question and suggested that it was a casus omissus. Mr. Alexander for the applicants relies on Article 181 as being applicable, and urges that the application is in time. In Ram Saran v. Chatar Singh (1), the applicants raised a similar plea to that now raised by Mr. Giles, but the High Court dismissed the contention as being without force, and stated that in its opinion when a Court (in that case a Mofusil Court) issued an order for abstention from any particular act and when the person, to whom that order had been issued, disobeys that order, he is guilty of contempt of Court and the Court could take proceedings to enforce its authority notwithstanding anything contained in Article 179 of the Indian Limitation Act XV of 1877 (corresponding to Article 182 of the present Act). In Bhagwandas v. Sukhdei (2), Mr. Justice Banerjee equally summarily dismissed a similar contention stating that the Article 182 did not apply and that under section 260 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, the decree-holder was entitled to ask the Court to enforce the decree for abstention from a particular act and all that the Court had to see was whether the party had an opportunity of obeying the decree and wilfully failed to obey it. The Madras High Court also holds that in such cases, Article 178 of the former or Article 181 of the present Limitation Act applies agreeing with the Allahabad High Court [Vide Venkatachalam Chetty v. Verrappa (3)]. Both the High Courts, therefore, support Mr. Alexander's contention, though in none of the cases is the reason for the conclusion arrived at vouchsafed.

Now, Article 182 relates solely to applications for the execution of a decree and Article 181 relates to applications not otherwise provided for. The question, therefore, is whether an application to punish a person, who is alleged to have done something which he is by a decree forbidden to do, is an application to a Court to execute a decree. I think there is a distinction between the procedure applicable to the failure to perform a positive decree and the procedure applicable to the breach of a negative decree. When a man is ordered to do something and fails to do it, the Courts would, as a general rule, cause that thing to be done by their own instrumentality, i. e., if the decree is for the payment of money and the debtor does not pay, the Courts will attach and sell sufficient of the debtor's property to satisfy the debt. (Vide rule 30, Order XXI). If the decree is for the delivery of any specific moveable and the debtor does not deliver it, the Court will seize it and deliver it. (Vide rule 31). If the decree is for the execution of a document and the debtor fails to execute it, the Court will execute it on his behalf. (Vide rule 34). If the decree is for delivery of immoveable property and the debtor fails to deliver it, the Court will oust him and deliver the property to the decree-holder itself. (Vide rule 35). When, however, a decree is negative and forbids a man to do a thing and the man goes and does that thing, the Court cannot execute the decree in the same sense. It cannot compel him not to do it for it has already been done; it can only punish him for his disobedience and restore the matter to their former state. It is true that in the case of affirmative decrees, a debtor who fails to obey a decree may usually be imprisoned, but this is not at all by way of punishment, but solely as an ancillary method of compelling him to do what he has been ordered; for, however long he may have evaded compliance with the Court's order, his detention is not increased but he is released the moment he obeys, and if imprisonment fails in its object, he must be released after the lapse of a certain time. In the case, however, of a negative decree, the proceedings on disobedience seem to me to be purely penal. The Court does not and cannot excuse or specifically perform the decree; it can only punish the breach and restore matters to their former condition. If the proceedings taken to enforce the negative decree were in execution of a decree, the defaulter can only be imprisoned for six weeks. (Vide section 586). Yet, if the same individual fails to obey a temporary injunction, he may be imprisoned for six months. (Order XXXIX, rule 2). Disobedience of a temporary injunction can hardly be regarded as more heinous than disobedience of a perpetual injunction. Yet the maximum penalty in the one case will be imprisonment for six months, in the other for six weeks, if the procedure adopted to enforce a negative decree is to be regarded as the execution of a decree. Again, in the former Code, in the sections corresponding to the rules 30 and 31 dealing with the mode of execution of a decree for the payment of money or delivery of moveables, the term enforced was used. Thus section 254 ran:—"Every decree for the payment of money might be enforced, etc.," and similarly section 259. In rules 30 and 31, which correspond to those sections, the word executed is now substituted. Both of these rules relate to positive decrees. In rule 32, however, which deals with negative decrees as well as with positive decrees, the word enforced is retained. It seems to me that the term enforced has been retained of set purpose and is of wider import than the term executed. Every decree may be enforced but only positive decrees can be executed. Article 182 only applies to the execution of decrees. This application is not, in my opinion, an application to execute a decree, and, therefore, it does not apply and the application is propely made under Article 181 and is in time.

The question then arises whether the light has been obstructed or diminished within the meaning of the injunction for the purposes of an application under Order XXI, rule 32 and, on the authority of Grand Junction Canal Co., v. Dimes (4), I ruled that an intention to violate an injunction was immaterial, unless the breach was actually carried into effect. At present, the breach alleged consists in the erection of a wall running east and west and facing petitioner's northern wall at a distance of about 11 feet. For the most part, this wall is about 15 feet in height but in one part it is 27 feet in height. Applicant had two windows in this north wall of his house and Mr. Ballardie tells us that the wall is of the same height opposite the centre of each window, but that the space from the wall to the eastern window is 11 feet, 7 inches, while that between the wall and the western window was 11 feet, 10 inches, with the result that the former window received 38 degrees, 47 minutes of unobstructed light and latter 39 degrees, 20 minutes. The model and plans put in show, and it is not disputed, that the building is intended to be much higher. The fact that the wall at the eastern end was 27 feet in height also shows this intention. It does not appear, however, according to the evidence, to have been prolonged sufficiently to the west to impair the eastern windows' lights. I suggested to the parties, with a view to avoiding possible subsequent applications, that they might be well advised to state under section 90 a case in which respondents might show the building proposed to be erected, so that if the Court held the present unfinished wall to be no breach, parties might have some guide as to how much further they could go. The respondents were willing to adopt this course but the applicants were convinced that the present erection already constituted a breach and declined. It is obvious that if the injunction is to be construed literally, the present erection would certainly constitute a breach. Neither party, however, contended for an absolutely literal construction. Mr. Alexander admitted that a diminution of light might be so small that no Court would take cognizance of it. Mr. Giles, however, for the respondents went further. He argued, and as I think correctly, that the case of Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (5) has definitely settled that a person possessed of ancient lights was not entitled to the whole cone of light but only to such portion as was necessary for the comfortable enjoyment of his house and for the carrying on of the accustomed business, if any, as beneficially as before (vide Lord Macnaghten at p. 187) or, in other words, that the deprivation sufficient to give a right of action must amount to a nuisance (Vide per Lord Halsbury at p. 185). It is indisputable that the decisions in England prior to this case had been very conflicting. (Vide per Lord Macnaghten at p. 189).

In India, I think the decisions have always approximated to those now laid down by the House of Lords. But, however that may be, it must be taken that the decision embodies what is and always has been the correct view; in other words, that the right of a person possessed of ancient lights is not infringed unless and until the deprivation amounts to a nuisance.

He then argued, and also as I think correctly, that an injunction could never have been intended either by the Court or the parties to do more than secure to a person the enjoyment of his legal rights and could not be construed as increasing those rights, and instanced the case of Dent v. The Auction Mart (6).

In this case, the injunction was, at any rate, more specific and detailed than the one under consideration, for it restrained the defendants from erecting any building so as to darken, hinder or obstruct the free access of light as theretofore enjoyed. One would have thought that any obstruction, not being so trivial as to be beneath notice, would have fallen under the ban, yet that it was not so construed is evidenced by the fact that the Court, as part of the same order, directed an inquiry as to whether any buildings had been erected—not so as to obstruct the access as heretofore enjoyed—but so as to materially interfere with the access of light and an order that such and such only should be pulled down.

He, therefore, argued that the present injunction forbidding obstruction so as to diminish the access of light must be similarly qualified. That the diminution must not be absolute, but material as laid down in Dent v. The Auction Mart (6) or such as to constitute a nuisance as laid down in Colls v. The Colonial Stores (5).

There is direct Indian authority for this contention in the case of Pranjivandass Harjivandas v. Mayaram Samaldas (7), where there was an injunction restraining the defendants from darkening or obstructing light of certain windows followed by an application to commit for breach and in which case the sole question argued was the quantum of the obstruction and whether it amounted to a breach.

Somewhat analogous instances of the introduction of similar qualifications may be found both in the Limitation Act and the corresponding portions of the English Prescription Act. Both of these Acts, if construed literally, imply that a person is entitled to the whole of his ancient lights. Neither has, as a matter of fact, been so construed. As Lord Halsbury speaking of the Prescription Act said:—"The Statute literally construed by the use of the words 'the light' would mean all the light; * * * yet singularly enough there has been a complete uniformity of decision upon the construction of the Statute that it has made no difference in the right conferred but is only concerned with the mode of proof."

The petitionors called Mr. Martin and Mr. De Paulson as experts and Mr. Ahmed Moola Dawood as a person who knew the rooms.

Mr. Martin said: "The effect of the wall as it exists now has diminished already the light and air. Light and air have been reduced and will be reduced. The air will not be so easily enjoyed, it will naturally be less than if it were all open space."

Mr. De Paulson says: "The rooms are not very well lighted now. The amount of light has been considerably reduced."

Mr. Ahmed Moola Dawood stated that the rooms were not so lighted as they were.

This is all the evidence that was called on the point. Mr. Alexander, in his final address, feeling, I think, its weakness, impressed me with the fact that in the case of Pranjivandas Herjivandass v. Mayaram Samaldas (7), Sausse, C. J., in a conflict of evidence, used his own common sense, but if that case be looked at, it will be seen that the experts gave much stronger evidence than they do here—one went so far as to say, 'no breeze or sun could ever enter'—and there the obstructing wall was within 2 feet of the ancient lights whereas here it is about 11 feet away. It was, therefore, a far easier case than the present.

In my opinion, therefore, this injunction must be construed not as increasing but only as maintaining the applicant's rights, and as prohibiting not every noticeable obstruction but only such obstruction as would interfere with the applicant's legal rights; that is to say, such as would amount to a nuisance. What then is a nuisance? I think it must be such an obstruction as to cause hurt or harm in person or pocket. The amount of light taken is not so important as the amount left. It is in evidence that if this wall of 15 feet in height is suffered to remain, one window will get 38 degrees, 47 minutes and the other 39 degrees, 47 minutes of unintercepted light measured to the sill of the window. Each, therefore, would receive slightly more if the angle were measured from the centre. That amount is not far short of 45 degrees and if a person is left with this amount, it is, as Lord Lindley states in Coll v. Colonial Stores (5), a fair working rule to hold that he has received no substantial injury especially if there is good light from other directions as well. In the rooms lit by these windows, there was little or no other light but nevertheless the case stands on the border line and it is particularly one requiring expert or other evidence.

The question to be determined is, in my opinion, whether these rooms have been shown to have been rendered uncomfortable according to the notions and habits of the class of the people who have and who are likely to inhabit them [vide Chhotalal Mohan Lal v. Lallubhai Surchand (8)] Would they let for less if let out to tenants? I am not prepared to say and I cannot say that the evidence assists me to an affirmative conclusion and I must, therefore, hold that the applicants have failed to show that the wall as at present erected constitutes a nuisance and must dismiss the present application with costs—10 gold mohurs in all. Respondents will, however, bear in mind that any further heightening of the wall may result in a nuisance with the result entailed by law.

The case coming on appeal before the Chief Judge and Mr. Justice Hartnoll, they passed the following

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—On November 6, 1899, the appellants' father obtained a decree against respondents in the Court of the Recorder of

Rangoon, the material portion of which was in the following terms:—"It is ordered and decreed that the defendants, their contractors, agents and workmen be and are hereby restrained from continuing the erection of the building in such a way as to obstruct or diminish the access of light and air to the said windows or any of them, or to interfere with or destory the said projecting eaves, and that defendants do pull down so much of the said house as may be erected hereafter and as shall interfere with access of light and air or eaves." On February 16, 1911, the appellants petitioned this Court stating that on January 10, 1911, the first respondent had started re-erecting the said building in contravention of the decree, in particular in building above the previous building as it existed before the suit, and as it stood after the defendants had removed the part in respect of which the injunction was obtained. The appellants asked that notice might issue to the first respondent to show cause why he should not be arrested for contempt of Court, and ask for orders for the enforcement of the decree by detention in the Civil Prison, and for the attachment of his property under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908 and for an order authorising the appellants to enter the respondent's adjoining house and to remove all the building and building material erected since January 2, 1911, at the cost of the respondent; and that the proceeds of the attached property might be held liable for such costs of removal when ascertained, as if they were costs in the decree in respect of which the said property was asked to be attached. At first the sole respondent was a trustee only of the property adjoining the appellants' property. Notice was accordingly directed to be issued to the other trustees as well as to the first respondent. At the hearing, objection was first of all taken on their behalf that the application, being an application for execution of a decree, was barred by Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, corresponding with Article 179 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. In consequence of there being three decisions of High Courts to the effect that applications under section 260 of the previous Code of Civil Procedure were not regulated by Article 179 of the Limitation Act, 1877, the learned Judge did not sustain the objection although as he says, in none of the cases is the reason for the conclusion vouchsafed or clear. The learned Judge himself drew a distinction between executing and enforcing decrees, which seems to be a distinction without a difference.

The first question we have to decide is, whether an application to the Court to exercise its powers under Order XXI, rule 32, is an application for the execution of a decree. Order XXI deals with the execution of the decrees and orders. Rules 30 to 36 inclusive deal with the modes of execution. Under the circumstances, I fail to see how an application to a Court to exercise one of the modes laid down can be other than an application for execution of a decree or order. If it is such, then it falls under Article 182 of the Limitation Act. In the case of Ram Saran v. Chatar Singh (1), it was said that a Court might enforce its decree in such a case as the present by process for contempt of Court but I am not aware that Courts in India other than Chartered High Courts have such power. I would hold that the application in the present case was barred by limitation, but even if this were not so, there is no ground for interfering with the order of the learned Judge. The decree by itself is not intelligible. To understand it, reference has to be made to the pleadings in the suit to ascertain what buildings and what windows were referred to, and in respect of what acts on the part of the defendants, the plaintiff complained, and what remedy he sought.

It appears from the record of the case that the defendants then proposed to put up a building on their land which would have had a wall quite close to the northern wall of the plaintiff's building, and this must have shut out practically all access of light and air to the two small windows in the plaintiffs' northern wall. The plaintiff proved that he had by prescription gained a right to light and air to those windows, and in consequence he obtained the decree. The respondents have now put up a building which still leaves access of light and air to the windows, although there may be not so much coming to them as came when there was no building there. In Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (5), the House of Lords decided that the law was and always had been that to constitute an actionable obstruction of ancient lights, it is not enough that the light is less than before. There must be a substantial privation of light, enough to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable according to the ordinary notions of mankind. The respondents have left a space of between eleven and twelve feet free opposite the windows in the north wall of the appellants' house, and the light from the sky comes to the bottom of them at angles of 33 degrees, 47 minutes and 39 degrees, 20 minutes. There is no rule that entitles ancient lights to access of light at an angle of 45 degrees. None of the witnesses said that the diminution of light would be such as to make occupation of the house uncomfortable. It is clear that the appellants' rights had not been infringed at the time of the application. I would dismiss the appeal with costs, three gold mohurs Advocate's fee.

HARTNOLL, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.
ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 892 OF 1910.
February 20, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Beaman.
JETHA BHIMA AND CO.—PLAINTIFFS
versus
LADY JANBAI—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 64, 73—Execution of decree—Private alienation—Subsequent application for rateable distribution by other creditors—Attachment of same property by other creditor—First attaching creditor paid off—Rights of subsequent creditors—Insolvency—Effect of vesting order—Attachment after vesting order.

Where there is an attachment, and after that attachment a private alienation, and after that private alienation again other creditors obtain decrees and put in claims for rateable distribution, then although those claims are made by persons different from the original attaching creditor and referable to different decrees, nevertheless they are, by the new Code of Civil Procedure, expressly made claims enforceable under the first attachment, provided that the first attachment is carried out and assets are in execution actually realized under that attachment and so made available for distribution rateably. In such circumstances, the main private alienation is void against all the claims of the creditors who have put in petitions for rateable distribution of assets after that private alienation was made.

Where, however, there has been an attachment, and after that a private alienation and after that again petitions for rateable distribution by other creditors, and the first attachment is swept away by reason of the attaching creditor declining to proceed with it, or accepting satisfaction privately, then all the subsequent claims to rateable distribution go with the attachment.

In this case, the subsequent creditors obtain no protection under section 64, Civil Procedure Code, against private alienation, for their claims to rateable distribution are only claims enforceable under the attachment, provided that attachment results in the realisation of assets which the Courts can rateably distribute.

Semble:—Where a creditor has attached the property of a judgment-debtor, who thereafter privately alienates the property, and after that alienation other creditors of the judgment-debtor impose attachments, then subsequent attaching creditors will not be entitled to the protection of section 64, when the prior attachment has fallen through.

A claim by way of second attachment cannot be said to be enforceable under a prior attachment when a condition precedent for enforcing the former is removal of the latter.

Bibi Miyakhan v. Gulab Chand, 13 Bom. L. R. 1189; 12 Ind. Cas. 923, explained and discussed.

Upon a vesting order being made, all the property of an insolvent passes to the Official Assignee and all decrees and other proceedings against the insolvent are ordinarily stayed.

After a vesting order has been made, any subsequent attachment on the property of the insolvent is, for all legal intents and purposes, a nullity in itself, and does not confer any advantage thereby under any of the sections dealing with ordinary execution proceeding under the Code of Civil Procedure.

In 1894, A. obtained a decree against B. and in execution of the decree attached certain property of B. Shortly after B. assigned the whole of his right, title and interest to C. In 1898, D. obtained a decree against B. In 1899, B. took the benefit of the Insolvency Act and his insolvency continued up to the present. In 1904, D. levied an attachment on the property already attached by A. A.'s debt was paid off and his attachment raised in 1907. C. thereupon applied to the Court and got D.'s attachment on the property raised. D. then brought the present suit to have it declared that the property upon which his attachment had been placed was the property of his judgment-debtor and was, therefore, still liable to attachment:

Held, (1) that D.'s attachment of 1904, while the insolvency was still continuing, was a nullity in itself and of no service to D. under the attachment of A to be made a ground of claiming the protection of section 64 against the private assignment to C;

(2) that the private assignment to C. was not void against D.

Mr. Talyarkhan, with him Mr. Setalvad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shortt, with him Mr. Desai, for Defendant No. 1.

Mr. Bhandarkar, with him Mr. Jaffarbhai, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The material facts and dates may be very briefly stated.

In 1894, Balkrishna brought a suit against Mahomed Medhi, obtained a decree for the sum of Rs. 7,000, and attached the right, title and interest of his debtor in certain properties, the said right, title and interest being variously computed in the arguments before me at from one to three lacs in the year 1896. Shortly after that attachment, the judgment-debtor, Mahomed Medhi, assigned the whole of his right, title and interest to the defendant in this suit, Lady Janbai. I may neglect the decree in attachment of Moti Gulabdas, which attachment was subsequent to the private assignment to the defendant. In 1898, the present plaintiff brought a suit and obtained a decree against his debtor, Mahomed Medhi. In 1899, Mahomed Medhi took the benefit of the Insolvency Act, and his insolvency, with a short break, which is not material to any point or argument in this case, continued until Balkrishna's attachment was finally raised in the year 1907 and indeed is still subsisting. In 1904, the present plaintiff levied an attachment on the property already attached by, and still lying under the attachment of, Balkrishna. After Balkrishna's debt had been paid off and his attachment raised, Lady Janbai applied to the Judge in Chambers and got the present plaintiff's attachment raised in 1910. The plaintiff has, therefore, been obliged to bring this suit to have it declared that the particular property upon which his attachment had been placed is the property of his judgment-debtor, and is, therefore, still liable to attachment.

It is quite clear, upon this short statement of facts, that unless the assignment of 1896 to the defendant Lady Janbai is void under section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff has no case, for if he wished to impeach that assignment upon any other ground, it is clear that he would be now time-barred. The question then is whether, in the facts and events that have happened, the private assignment of 1896 is void against the plaintiff's attachment of 1904, because that latter attachment is a claim enforceable under Balkrishna's attachment of 1896. It will be convenient to leave aside for a moment the complication introduced by the insolvency and to deal with the rights of the parties in this suit as though no insolvency had occurred.

I will, therefore, briefly state what I conceive to be the law governing the rights of the plaintiff and the defendant under section 64, read with section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. My conclusion has been arrived at after a very careful and exhaustive study of all the leading authorities upon this head of the law, and it can be stated very simply and in a very few words. Where there is an attachment, and after that attachment a private alienation, and after that private alienation, again, other creditors obtain decrees and put in claims for rateable distribution, then although those claims are made by persons different from the original attaching creditor and referable to different decrees, nevertheless they are now expressly made claims enforceable under the first attachment provided that the first attachment is carried out and in execution assets are actually realized under that attachment and so made available for distribution rateably. In such circumstances, the main private alienation is void against all the claims of the creditors who have put in petitions for rateable distribution of assets after that private alienation was made. Where, however, there has been an attachment, and after that a private alienation, and after that again petitions for rateable distribution by other creditors, and the first attachment is swept away by reason of the attaching creditor declining to proceed with it, or accepting satisfaction privately, then all the subsequent claims to rateable distribution go with the attachment. Subsequent creditors, where that has happened, obtain no protection under section 64 against private alienation, for their claims to rateable distribution are only claims enforceable under the attachment, provided that attachment results in the realisation of assets which the Court can rateably distribute. I do not think that a single authority among the many I have consulted could be found the other way.

The next question is whether where subsequent creditors, instead of applying merely for rateable distribution, impose attachments of their own during the continuance of a prior attachment, those later attachments are claims enforceable under the first. It is to be observed that the practice of this Court on its Orignal Side, as explained to me by the Prothonotary, is that where property has already been attached and other creditors issue subsequent attachments, those attachments, so long as the first continues, are entered in what is called the Negative Book, where they are left to be dealt with as events turn out. If the first attachment falls through, then the first in date of the subsequent applications for attachment in the Negative

Book is substituted for it. But if the first attachment runs its full course, then all three subsequent attachments are treated as prayers for rateable distribution. That being the practice, I am to consider whether the subsequent attaching creditor is in a better position under section 64 than a subsequent creditor who has only applied for rateable distribution. I think it is clear that he is, for while an application for rateable distribution goes altogether when the original attachment falls through, an application for attachment, which may have to be converted into a prayer for rateable distribution, always stands ready to take the place of the first attachment should that creditor desist from proceeding with it. So that we arrive at this position. Suppose A. has attached the property of X. and X. has thereafter privately alienated that property, and after that alienation again B., C. and D., other creditors of X. impose attachments, A.'s attachment continuing in force the while, will the main private alienation by X. be void against the attachments of B., C. and D. in order, should A.'s attachment be withdrawn or fall through? And the answer to that clearly depends upon whether those subsequent attachments are really claims enforceable under the first attachment. In a sense they may certainly be said to be claims enforceable "under" it, because so long as A. prosecutes his attachment, the hands of B., C. and D. are tied and they can do nothing but wait realizations and rateable distribution. So that in fact, whatever may be said in law, the subsequent attaching creditors are under, that is to say, subject to, the attachment firs timposed. But assuming that attachment to have been withdrawn or satisfied in any way short of realisation in execution, then the questionis, whether the first of the subsequent attachments, which is there to take its place, is to take its place as from its own date or the date of the first attachment. If the latter, then doubtless it would be prior in point of time to the private alienation and the private alienation would, of course, without further need of argument be subject to it. But it may still be doubted, I think, whether subsequent attachments of this kind, waiting their turn in the event of the prior attachment falling through, can be said in strictness to be claims enforceable under that attachment, for it is a pre-requisite of their being enforceable at all that that attachment should first disappear. This is, of course, not the case where, instead of attachments, prayers have been made for rateable distribution. Those are in strictness claims enforceable under the existing attachment, and had there been any doubt upon the question, since the introduction of the new Code of Civil Procedure, that doubt has been finally removed.

This somewhat nice question, whether a subsequent attachment nominally, though not really, imposed during the continuance of a prior attachment, is a claim enforceable under it, never, as I am aware, has been made the subject of a judicial decision except in one very recent case of Bibi Miyakhan v. Gulabchand (1). There the facts were that during the continuance of an attachment which was, I believe, although this does not appear from the report, being conducted by the Collector, the judgment-debtor made a private sale of the attached property which was not certified to the Court at the time it was made. Then a very few days after that private alienation, another creditor put in a drakhast asking in the alternative for rateable distribution or for a second attachment. The first attachment, appears to have lasted for nearly two years after this transaction, and the lerrned Judges. Chandavakar and Batchelor, JJ., held that although the second drakhast could not have been granted where it asked for a second attachment and as regards its prayer for rateable distribution, no question of that kind could arise when the first attachment had fallen through, yet when that first attachment was swept away, the alternative prayer of this darkhast was there to take its place, and upon that principle, which seems to imply that they referred the date of the second attachment back to the date of the first, the learned Judges held that the main private alienation was void. As this is the only case directly in point which I have been able to find (for I think that the other case decided a month earlier by Chandavarkar and Hayward, JJ., is of a different character and distinguishable), since the conclusion the learned Judges arrived at does not agree or does not seem to agree with the view of the law I have expressed, I consulted those learned Judges as to the true scope and intention of the judgment. It then appeared that this case was really the case of a decree transferred for execution to the Collector under the old section 325A of the Code and in dealing with cases of that kind, it may well be that different considerations arise and may influence the decision. Were I sure that those learned Judges had intended to lay down the rule that any subsequent attachment imposed during the continuance of a prior attachment is a claim enforceable under it and the main prior private alienation is, therefore, void against the second attachment, when the first has fallen through, under section 64 of our Code, I should, of course, feel myself bound by that decision. When I first studied it, I thought that was what the learned Judges had meant to decide and I was inclined to think that the decision was right. It was not until after very long reflection and minute examination of many other authorities that I began to doubt the correctness of the decision. Whether it be right or wrong, however, is not a question for me to answer. I should be bound by it and it could only be overturned, if wrong, by a decision of a Full Bench. It will be seen how closely the facts of that case (excepting the method of execution) resemble the facts of the case I have to deal with, for supposing that the decrees there were being executed in the usual way, there would be an attachment corresponding with Balkrishna's attachment, a private assignment corresponding in time with Lady Janbai's, and a subsequent attachment corresponding with the attachment upon which the plaintiff relies. In both cases, the assignment came between the first and the second attachment and in both cases the first attachment, although it was finally settled privately and so fell through, was in force and subsisting at the time of the second. So that I should have felt it extremely difficult to distinguish that case from the present, and although I understand that the learned Judges did not really mean to lay down quite so broad and far-reaching a principle, I think, I should have been compelled to say that the present facts fell under that judgment, and that, as there, so here, the main private alienation was void against the subsequent attaching creditors. It appears to me in principle to make no difference that Balkrishna's attachment in this case dragged on for eleven years and the plaintiff had not even obtained a decree, much less imposed his attachment, until some years after the private alienation.

But there is another ground, upon which, without distinguishing the Bench decision I have referred to, I think, I may safely dispose of this case. So far I have treated the facts and the law as though none of the arguments were affected or the conclusions disturbed by the fact that the debtor in this case became an insolvent after the private alienation but before the second attachment. I have now to consider how far an otherwise entirely general conclusion must be modified by that special factor. I have already said that in my own view, if I can see my way to distinguish the case of Bibi Miyakhan v. Gulabchand (1), the result would be the same, for I feel very grave doubt whether a subsequent attaching creditor is really entitled to the protection of section 64 of the Code, when a prior attachment has been obtained and fallen through. I see no reason either in law or in equity why this should be so. I have explained that in law I see no reason, for as a pure question of interpretation, I think, it is impossible to say that a claim by way of second attachment is enforceable under a prior attachment when a condition precedent for enforcing the fromer is the removal of the latter. In equity, that is to say, upon general principles of justice, I also fail to understand why a dilatory creditor should have the benefit of the protection which is accorded to one more diligent. There is nothing that I know of to prevent a dozen creditors levying attachments on the same day and although no doubt, the first in point of time would still be called the attaching creditor, yet if his attachment fell through, the others would come in as from the same date and would all be equally protected. Now, no consideration of this kind appears to me to apply to the case of a creditor who imposes an attachment no less than eight years after the attachment and after the private alienation, on the strength of the one and against the other of which he invokes the protection of section 64.

I turn now to the consideration of the somewhat singular state of affairs brought about by the insolvency of the judgment-debtor in 1899. At that time the whole of his interest had been attached under the decree of 1896 and had been assigned away subject to that decree in the same year. The Official Assignee appears from the first to have recognised the bona fides and legal validity of the assignment, subject, of course, to the claim of the first attaching creditor, although the Official Assignee took no steps to have that attachment raised. It was not until five years after the insolvency that the present plaintiff, who had obtained a decree in 1898, levied the attachment upon which he now relies; and it is certainly an extraordinary, and I should think, very anomalous, state of affairs which discloses the attachment of 1896 still subsisting and apparently not finally raised until 1907. What, then, is the effect of an attachment imposed by the creditor of a judgment-debtor, who has taken the benefit of the Insolvency Act, after the vesting order has been made? As to all existing attachments, I think it may be said generally that they ought to be raised either by the Courts suo motu or at the instance of the attaching creditors or of the Official Assignee, for it is well understood that such attachments ordinarily give no preference, still less create any title; and when they are found to be existing, the Official Assignee usually acting on behalf of all the creditors gets them removed, so that all the funds may be available for rateable distribution. In the present instance, this was not done, because the Official Assignee, as I have said, adopted a view from the first that, so far as this attached property was concerned, it had been validly assigned away before the insolvency. But had the usual course been followed, then there would have been no attachment subsequent to the assignment of 1896 of which the present plaintiff could have availed himself even for the purposes of a technical argument in 1904; and it might be contended that although the Official Assignee did not, he ought to have raised Balkrishna's attachment of 1896, for that attachment was admittedly good against the subsequent assignment to the extent of the decreed claim, and inasmuch as the attachment itself gave no preference, it might be thought that that decreed claim was thus an asset realisable for the benefit of all the creditors. My present point, however, is by insisting upon what would have followed had this attachment been raised, to extract the position I now propose to take that the later attachment of 1904, while the insolvency was still continuing, was for all legal intents and purposes a nullity in itself and of no service to the plaintiff under the attachment of 1896 to be made a ground of claiming the protection of section 64 against the private assignment. Upon the vesting order being made, all the property of an insolvent passes to the Official Assignee and all decrees and other proceedings against the insolvent are ordinarily stayed. Whether they are stayed by express order or by operation of law, it appears to me that no progress could in any case be made with them, for the property of the insolvent debtor is no longer there to be attached and the decree-holders must wait until the insolvency terminates, if they wish to enforce their decrees against the persons of whom the law has indirectly, but very clearly, announced to the whole world that no property is attachable at all.

I do not think, therefore, that the plaintiff can rely upon his attachment of 1904 as bringing him within the scope and meaning of section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code and so making the private assignment void against him. I do not think myself that he could have done so had there been no insolvency; but as there was an insolvency, and, therefore, no property belonging to his judgment-debtor upon which any legal attachment could have been levied in 1904 or against which any legal process issuing from any Court could have gone, the whole of that attachment appears to me to be suspended so long as the insolvency exists and to have no legal effects or consequences whatsoever. We need not, however, go too finely into the question of the general principle upon which I am now basing this judgment, and that is this, that while the insolvency continued, no attaching creditor purporting to attach the insolvent's property could take any advantage thereby under any of the sections dealing with ordinary execution proceedings under the Code of Civil Procedure.

In this view of the law, I think the plaintiff's case entirely fails and must now be dismissed with all costs.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT NO. 118 OF 1911.

April 2, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chaudhuri.

B. E. M. RODRICKS—PLAINTIFF

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT.

Jurisdiction—High Court—Cause of action arising wholly outside jurisdiction—Letters Patent, clause 12—Leave of Court obtained when plaint filed—Defendant's right to question propriety of leave—Secretary of State, whether mere name or body corporate and person—Suit for damages for malicious prosecution against Secretary of State in High Court, whether maintainable—Government of India Act (21 & 22 Vict. C. 106), s. 65.

Leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent cannot be granted where the whole cause of action in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution has arisen outside the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court. If such leave is granted in the absence of the defendant, he is not bound thereby and can object to it at the hearing of the suit.

Held, following Doya Narain Tewari v. Secretary of State, 14 C. 256, that the Secretary of State cannot be held to dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain at the capital or head-quarters of a Government, and that section 65 of the Government of India Act does not constitute the Secretary of State a body corporate.

Obiter dicta—(1) The Secretary of State is not a mere name but a body corporate and a person within the meaning of clause 12 of the Letters Patent, and for purposes of suit, represents the Government.

(2) The Secretary of State, namely, the Government, is to be deemed to dwell and carry on business at the capital of the Government, and is, therefore, amenable to the High Court whose original jurisdiction embraces the capital.

Bipro Dos Dey v. Secretary of State, 14 C. 262*n*, relied upon.

Mr. N. Sirkar, instructed by Messrs. B. N. Bose & Co., Solicitors, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Kenrick, K. C., Advocate-General, instructed by Mr. Kesteren, Solicitor for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to recover the sum of Rs. 10,000 by way of damages for a false and malicious prosecution, said to have been conducted against him in the District of Rungpur, in which he says he was falsely accused of criminal breach of trust in respect of certain articles belonging to the Eastern Bengal State Railway, when he was employed as a servant of the Railway. He states that the criminal proceedings terminated in his acquittal, that such proceedings were taken maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, and claims to be entitled to judgment against the Secretary of State for India in Council, for damages. It has not been argued before me, whether or not such a suit is maintainable against the Secretary of State for India in Council, the only point urged being that this Court has no jurisdiction under the Charter to entertain it. The argument on both sides has also proceeded upon the basis that the whole of the cause of action in this suit arose outside the local jurisdiction of this Court. I find, however, from the 9th paragraph of the plaint that the plaintiff asked for leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent "to safeguard himself against any contention" that part of the cause of action arose outside Calcutta. I find also from an endorsement on the plaint that such leave was granted by a learned Judge of this Court then sitting on the Original Side. I do not, however, find anything in the plaint upon which such leave could have been granted. It may be, there are facts which have not been fully set out in the plaint, upon which the plaintiff could have legitimately asked for such leave, but, as the matter now stands, I must hold that leave under clause 12 was not rightly granted and the Secretary of State for India in Council cannot be bound by the leave so given. The order was made in his absence, and he can, undoubtedly, question it. As I have said before, the argument has proceeded on the basis that no part of the cause of action in this suit arose within the local limits of our jurisdiction. The learned Advocate-General contends that this Court has no jurisdiction to try an action of this character against the Secretary of State for India in Council, the cause of action having arisen wholly outside our local jurisdiction. He says that unless it can be shown in cases like this, that the Secretary of State for India in Council is a person who dwells, or carries on business, or personally works for gain within the local limits of Calcutta, this Court cannot try a suit instituted against him, and relies upon Doya Narain Tewary v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1). That case was decided by two Judges sitting on the Original Side of this Court composing a Bench constituted by the then Chief Justice on the 10th August 1886. There were three other similar cases which were referred to the same Bench for disposal, in all of which the Secretary of State for India in Council was defendant. The Bench was so constituted, I take it, upon a reference by one of the Judges, who was then sitting on the Original Side of this Court under rule 54 (Original Side), although I have not been able to find the order of reference. There is no doubt that the case of Doya Narain Tewary v. The Secretary of State (1) is direct authority for the proposition that no such suit is maintainable. The learned Judges there hold that the Secretary of State for India in Council does not dwell within the local jurisdiction of this Court, or carry on business, or personally work for gain. In so deciding, the learned Judges discussed the decision of Mr. Justice Pigot in Bipro Doss Dey v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2). Pigot, J., had taken a directly opposite view. He held that such a suit was maintainable. He held further that if the Secretary of State for India in Council in this country was a legal person in any sense, he could not possibly hold that he did not carry on business in Calcutta. So far as I am concerned, I am bound by the decision of the two learned Judges, Mitter and Trevelyan, JJ., who constituted the Bench to whom the matter was referred, but as I am not convinced in my mind that the decision is correct, I state my reasons. However differently the word "business" may have been construed at different times, I do not think there is any question whatever that a carrier's business is "business" within the meaning of section 12 of the Letters Patent, nor is there any doubt that a Railway Company, or other Corporate Body, or even a body of individuals, whether incorporated or not, is a "person" within the meaning of that section. See the definition of the word "person" in the General Clauses Act, 1897. It cannot also be doubted that a Railroad Company, apart from the fact of having a Registered Office, "carries on business" at its principal office where the Directors meet and the general business of the Company is transacted. Jessel, M. R., in Erichsen v. Last (3), said that where the "Brain Power" is, there a trade or business is carried on. The question, therefore, is as to whether the Secretary of State for India in Council, is a "person" within the meaning of section 12 of the Letters Patent, and if so does that "person" carry on business in Calcutta, which at the time of the institution of this suit was the capital of the Government of India.

I shall, therefore, first consider the position of the Secretary of State for India in Council as a defendant in suits. In order to understand the position of the Government in this country, it is necessary to refer to certain old Acts. At the time that 21 Geo. III, C. 70, and 37 Geo. III, C. 142 were enacted, the Governor-General, the Governors of Bombay and Madras and their Councillors were servants of the East India Company, and it was necessary to protect them by special enactments from suits on account of things done by them in the exercise of their quasi-political functions. By Statute 3 and 4 Wm. IV. C. 85, the trading capacity of the Company was abolished except as to such trade as was necessary for purposes of the State. By 21 and 22 Vic., C. 106, the Government was transferred from the East India Company to the Crown. Section 65 of that Statute provides as follows:—"The Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue, and be sued as well in India, as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a Body Corporate; and all persons and Body politic shall and may have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company; and the property and effects hereby vested in Her Majesty for the purposes of the Government of India or acquired for the said purposes, shall be subject and liable to the same judgments and executions as they would while vested in the said Company have been liable to in respect of debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the said Company." By the words of the Statute, a clear right of suit is given against the Secretary of State for India in Council as a Body Corporate. Mitter and Trevelyan, JJ., however, hold that this section does not constitute the Secretary of State for India in Council a Body Corporate. Perhaps not so for all purposes, but it is quite clear that they were constituted a Body Corporate for purposes of suits, and as such represent the Government of India in such suits as may be maintained against the Government. Sir Richard Garth in Judah v. The Secretary of State for India in Council(4)says—"It seems to me that since the Statute 21 and 22 Vic., C. 106, the Secretary of State for India in Council represents the Government here to all intents and purposes. He is the officer of the Crown authorized to sue and be sued in respect of all Crown debts and contracts." On page 452, he says:—"Section 1 of that Act deals only with the manner in which suits are to be brought and has nothing to do with substantive rights. The latter part of the section says nothing as to what rights may be acquired either by the Secretary of State or by the Crown through the Secretary of State, nor as to the nature or character of rights so acquired. It leaves that to be governed by the ordinary principles of law. But with regard to liabilities which may be enforced against the Secretary of State there are express words."

The East India Company was in its origin a Trading Company, which became vested with sovereign powers. There is no question that the Company was liable to suits in respect of acts done in their trading capacity.

In Gibson v. The East India Company (5), Chief Justice Tindal distinctly points out that the power of the East India Company was of a two-fold nature—one political and the other commercial. By 21 and 22 Vict. C. 106, such right of suits, as individuals had against the East India Company, was continued as against the Secretary of State. This was an exceptional enactment. Colonial Governments have been held not to be liable to such suits. They are not subject to any similar provision. See Sloman v. The Government of New Zealand (6).

The East India Company at the time, that the Government was transferred from them, had power to carry on trade for purposes of the State. After the transfer, such trade has been carried on by the Government of India in this country, and, as pointed out by Pigot, J., in the case of Bipro Doss Dey v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2), the Government is a frequent litigant in the Indian Courts in respect of matters arising out of such trade.

The Secretary of State for India in Council cannot in this country claim on behalf of the Crown the prerogative of immunity from suits. As is pointed out in The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Hari Bhanji (7), two principles regulate the maintenance of proceedings at law by a subject against the Sovereign—the one, having a relation to the personal status of the defendant—the other, to the character of that in respect of which relief is sought. In England the form of procedure permitted to a subject who considers himself aggrieved by an act of the Crown, is by petition of rights. In this country the Crown has consented to submit some of its acts to the jurisdiction of the Municipal Courts. It is not necessary in this case to discuss the nature of the acts for which Government can be sued in our Courts. The defendant concedes for the present, that such a suit as this is maintainable against the Government. I am, therefore, of opinion that for purposes of such a suit, the Secretary of State for India in Council is a Body Corporate and a person within the meaning of clause 12 of the Letters Patent.

Just before the Letters Patent of 1862, the first Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) had come into operation so far as the Mofussil Courts were concerned. Section 5 of that Act dealt with the jurisdiction of those Courts. In that Act there was no provision as to how the Government might sue or be sued. The Civil Procedure Code of 1877, Chapter 27, section 416, introduced the provision which we now find in section 79 of our present Code. It laid down that suits against the Government were to be instituted in the name of the Secretary of State for India in Council. The Secretary of State for India in Council, therefore, is more than a "mere name." He is, for purposes of suits, to be treated as a "person," and represents the Government. The learned Advocate General referred me to Ilbert's Government of India (2nd edition), pages 176-177, which does help to decide the point. I notice that on page 146, the learned author says this: "the office of the Secretary of State is constitutionally a unit, though there are five officers." Reference was made by the learned Judges in Doya Narain Tewary's case (1) to Kinloch v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (8), in which the plaintiff sued for an account and distribution of "booty of war" come to the hands of the Secretary of State under a Royal Warrant. It was argued that the defendant thus became "trustee" and the "booty" was "trust fund." James, L. J., held it was not a trust, and that the Secretary of State for India in Council (the name by which the Government can be sued) was not a person capable of being trustee, because according to that learned Judge, the Government of India was not capable of being the trustee of such a fund. The property in that case had vested in the Crown, and was to be distributed by the servants of the Crown according to the Crown's directions, and that, therefore, no Municipal Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The observations made in the course of the judgment refer to the matter which was before the Court of appeal and cannot be considered of general application. To hold that where suits are actually maintainable against the Secretary of State for India in Council, he is a "mere name," I consider erroneous. He is a "Body Corporate" in such a suit according to the express words of the Statute. If, however, the Secretary of State for India in Council is a "mere name", it is quite clear that a name can never be said to "dwell" anywhere or "carry on business." It is also clear that a "mere name" can do nothing. The name cannot sue or be sued, nor can there ever be a cause of action against a mere name, but as I hold it is not, I shall consider whether the Secretary of State for India in Council, who is "legal person" in such suits, can be said to dwell in Calcutta, or carry on business there. It seems to me difficult to say that the Government does not dwell in its own capital, and that a Government engaged in trade, though it may be for purpose of the State, does not "carry on business," if Sir George Jessel is right that where the "Brain Power" is, there a trade or business is carried on. That the Brain Power of the Government of India is at its seat of Government, is not an unjustifiable assumption. I would have had, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the Secretary of State for India in Council, namely, the Government, dwells at its capital and carries on business there, and is thus amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court, in cases where a suit can be maintained against the Government.

I have gone through the cases referred to by Mr. Justice Pigot in his judgment, and I may say I generally agree with the view expressed by him. In the case of The Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (9), the question has been elaborately discussed. The learned Judge points out that there are several cases decided in our Courts against the Secretary of State in spite of the ruling in Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10). The observations in that case were made for the guidance of the profession and are obiter. About the same time, the Madras Court, in the case of Subbaraya Mudali v. The Government (11), took a different view, after which came the cases of Brito v. The Secretary of State for India (12), in which the question of jurisdiction does not appear to have been raised, Hari Bhanji v. The Secretary of State (13) and Secretary of State for India v. Hari Bhanji (7). Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10) was cited during argument but was not commented upon in the judgment. It appears that in spite of the decision in Rundle v. Secretary of State for India in Council (10), the other High Courts continued to exercise jurisdiction over the Secretary of State. This Court also did the same in the case of Ross Johnson v. The Secretary of State (14), although how it came to do so, in direct conflict of the decision in Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10), is not clear. See also Hukumchand's Civil Procedure Code, page 319, where the references are collected. I may also refer to Doss v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (15), see page 535, in which Sir R. Malins, V. C., allowed the demurrer, one of the grounds being that the plaintiff was a resident of India and the Secretary of State "was also in India". Reference was made, during the argument in that case, to Holmes, in re (16), in which a demurrer was allowed on the ground that the Queen was as much "resident" in Canada as in England.

Having regard to what I have said before, and with great respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of Doya Narain Tewary v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1), I venture to dissent from the views therein expressed, but as I hold that I am bound by the decision of a Bench so constituted, I must hold that this Court has no jurisdiction. The suit will accordingly be dismissed with costs, unless the defendant will consent to waive costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Adjustment—Reference to arbitration without intervention of Court—Acceptance of award by parties.

The question, whether there has been an adjustment, should be decided by a consideration of the terms and the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure apart from a consideration of the provisions of the Code which relate to arbitration.

If the parties to a suit agree to refer matters in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and subsequently accept the award, such acceptance is an adjustment within the meaning of rule 3, Order XXIII.

JUDGMENT.

HARTNOLL, J.—C. T. A. Annamalay Chetty sued K. M. T. T. Shanmugam Chetty and A. R. S. Sathappa Chetty for dissolution of partnership and the other usual reliefs consequent on such a decree being passed. In the course of the suit and without any reference to the Court, the parties referred the matters in dispute to arbitration on the 27th April 1910. The arbitrators duly made an award on the 23rd May 1910. From the 29th April 1910, adjournments were given by the Court as there was a prospect of settlement. On June 14th, Shanmugam's Counsel presented an application stating that the case had been referred to arbitration, and that an award had been passed and asking for time to file the award for a decree in accordance with its terms. The Judge noted that Annamalay's Counsel admitted that there was an award but objected to its being filed, because the matter was referred to arbitration without the leave of the Court as required by the provisions of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. Sathappa's Counsel also objected on the same ground. The learned Judge allowed the objections and ordered a preliminary decree to be drawn up in the terms of Form 21, Appendix D, to the Code with certain modifications. Then on July 1st, an application was made by Shanmugam for an order of an adjustment under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3 of the first Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The application set out that the parties had referred the matters in dispute to arbitration, that such were finally settled by an award of the 23rd May, that Shanmugam had complied with the award by handing over to the arbitrator all the documents, jewellery and other properties which the other parties were entitled to receive in accordance with its terms except a sum of Rs. 2,600, which was by the award to be paid on the 23rd June and that the arbitrators had handed over to the other parties whatever Shanmugam had handed over to them, that this took place on the 23rd and 24th May and that before and on the 23rd June, Shanmugam had offered to pay the Rs. 2,600 to the other parties who had refused to accept it. The learned Judge heard Counsel on the application and dismissed it. From that order of dismissal, this appeal has been laid. It was objected at the hearing that the order that should have been appealed from was the order of the 14th June which directed the drawing up of a preliminary decree and so that this appeal does not lie. The order directing the drawing up of the preliminary decree was not based on a consideration of any application under Order XXIII, rule 3. The application then before the Court was for time to file an award, which application was objected to. I am not prepared to hold that it was not within the power of the appellant to file an application for an adjustment under Order XXIII, rule 3, subsequent to the order directing the drawing up of the preliminary decree and if it was within his power, it had to be adjudicated on and an appeal would lie from such adjudication. I cannot, therefore, hold that this appeal does not lie.

In order to assist us to arrive at a decision as to whether an order of an adjustment should be made under Order XXIII, rule 3, the following cases were brought to our notice, Pragdas Sagurmall v. Girdhardas Mathuradas (1), Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (2), Tincowry Dey v. Fakir Chand Dey (3) and Rukhanbai v. Adamaji Shaik Rajbhai (4). It seems to me that the matter must be decided on a consideration of the terms and meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, apart from the consideration of the provisions of the Code which relate to references to arbitration. It is not asked now that any of the provisions relating to arbitration be applied. Order XXIII, rule 3, is as follows:—

"Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as relates to the suit." Now, the agreement to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration certainly did not finally settle the suit. It only was a means towards that end. Again, the award following on the agreement, to my mind did not adjust the suit within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3. Taken by itself, it was merely an award by arbitrators and not an agreement between the parties. Taken in conjunction with the agreement it cannot be said to form an agreement, between the parties. It was certainly open to any of the parties to refuse to be bound by the award for any good reason such as corruption and misconduct of the arbitrators. But, if the parties did accept the award, then, I think, that such acceptance would come within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3. The acceptance by the parties of the award would mean that they agreed to be bound by its terms, or that they agreed to compromise in accordance with its terms. This view is in accordance with that of Beaman J. in the case of Rukhanbai v. Adamji Shaik Rajbai (4). The appellant alleges here that the respondents did accept and agree to the award. Whether they did or not has not been required into.

I would, therefore, fix the following issue:—

"Did respondents agree to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration and did they subsequently accept the award of the arbitrators ?"

This issue should be tried and a finding on it should be recorded by the District Judge and the proceedings with his finding thereon should be re-submitted to this Court in due course

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 133 OF 1912.
May 1, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Imam.
EMPEROR
versus
MOTI LAL CHANDER AND ANOTHER—
APPELLANTS.

Excise Act (V, B. C. of 1909), ss. 2 (14), (20), 9 (2), 10, 46, 52, 55, 57—Exciseable liquor, meaning of—Tinctures, whether liquor—Prevention of smuggling of drugs prepared in French territory, how to be effected—"Juice drawn from any cocoanut," meaning of—Taking order for foreign goods, whether constitutes abetment of transport.

The definition of "Exciseable liquor" given in the new Excise Act (V B. C. of 1909), prevents chemists and vendors of drugs selling intoxicating liquors or otherwise dealing with them as medicinal preparations.

Tinctures of Cinchona, Cardamom or Ginger and Spirits of Nitric Ether are not exciseable liquor.

The smuggling of drugs prepared in French territory with French spirits in Bond into British territory can be prevented under the customs law. Therefore, those articles ought to be dealt with by the Customs Authorities; but the omission of these authorities to do so does not render the accused liable to punishment under the Excise Act.

"Juice drawn from any cocoanut" in section 2, clause 20, of the Excise Act, does not refer to the milk of the cocoanut itself but means the juice of the palm tree of whatever species and not its fruit.

The act of taking an order for foreign goods does not constitute an abetment of their transport, though it might be an abetment of their import.

Gonesh Chundra Sikdar v. Queen-Empress, 24 C. 157, is good law.

Appeal against the order of the Second Presidency Magistrate, dated January 25th, 1912.

Mr. J. N. Roy and Babus Manmotha Nath Mukherji and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Jatindra Mohun Ghosh, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and sentence of the second Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, who has convicted the appellants, Mati Lal Chandra and Promotha Lal Chandra, of transporting exciseable articles from Chandernagore to Calcutta under section 46, Act V of 1909, and of being in possession of exciseable articles knowing the same to have been unlawfully imported under section 52 of the same Act read with section 55 of the Act and sentenced them both under section 57 to a fine of Rs. 1,000 each or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The facts are as follows:—There is a manufactory of drugs known as the Indian Pharmacy Co., situate in French territory at Chandernagore within the compound of the Distillery of the French Government. This factory is ostensibly owned by a lady, named Giribala Dassi, widow of the gentleman who originally started the business.

The accused persons are her nephews and the first is a Pleader at Hughly, the second a clerk in the office of the Director of Commercial Intelligence in Calcutta. Their family house is at Chandernagore, but they seem to habitually reside in Calcutta. For the purposes of this case, we may take it on the evidence, though the appellants disputed this, that these gentlemen both have an active interest in the management of the Chandernagore business. On the 29th August 1911, the accused No. 2 received an order from Messrs. B. K. Paul, large wholesale and retail druggists in Calcutta, for three cases of tinctures consisting of 25 one pound bottles of each of (1) Tincture of Cinchona, (2) Tincture of Cardamom, (3) Spirits of Nitric Ether, (4) Tincture of Ginger. This order is Exhibit B in the case and is of some importance. It is headed "Indian Pharmacy"; it is on a printed Invoice slip of B. K. Paul & Co., and it says "Please supply" the tinctures already mentioned and is signed B. K. Paul & Co., admittedly by one Haridhan Nag, P. W. No. 2, who is Manager and Superintendent of the godown and signs for Messrs. B. K. Pal.

On the 2nd September, a Saturday, one Tarini Charan Mukerjee, alleged by the prosecution to be the Sircar of the Indian Pharmacy, conveyed the three cases from Chandernagore to Howrah where they were consigned to him and took them thence in a carriage to Messrs. B. K. Paul's godown at 16, China Bazar Lane, and delivered them to the Manager. The same evening a letter was received from the 2nd accused, Exhibit 2, which is also of great importance and runs as follows:—

EMPEROR v. MOTI LAL CHANDER.

"Re your order of 29th August 1911. The medicines of the above order have been despatched under your instructions. Please order them to be opened and counted." Then follows an interpolation "in presence of our agent" in smaller writing and different ink but we have no reason to doubt it is in the same handwriting, viz., that of P. L. Chandra.

The letter goes on: "The order of the 29th ultimo will be attached to the Bill when it will be presented to you afterwards, as is the custom with you and elsewhere. But it is impossible for us to attach it with our invoice as it has never been the practice with you or anywhere. Hope you will do what is needful." From this, it would appear that some message, oral or written, had been sent by Messrs. B. K. Paul to the 2nd accused.

On the 5th September, the two accused came to B. K. Paul's shop as they say to discuss prices for a contract for which they were tendering as Messrs. B. K. Pal expected to get a large order from the Government of the U. P. or the Punjab. The correspondence seems to show it was connected with Oudh but this is immaterial. An Excise Officer saw them enter the shop and leave again for the godown at China Bazar. He informed Mr. Wilson, the Excise Officer, who had long been on the look out for these Chandernagore medicine sellers and he went to the godown and says that he found them sitting at a table with price lists, one of which is Exhibit 1, before them, and the three boxes of medicines, two closed and one open. The letter Exhibit 2 and the challan Exhibit 3 and other documents, Exhibits 4 and 5, were found on the table. He made a search-list Exhibit 6 and seized all the articles. Upon this evidence, the accused have been acquitted of importing exciseable articles but convicted of transporting and possessing the three cases of medicines in question.

The points raised in the appeal by the defence are: (1) That these tinctures are not exciseable articles. (2) That the accused are not proprietors of the Indian Pharmacy nor its agents. (3) That T. C. Mookerjee is not their Sircar but the agent of Messrs. B. K. Paul or at least became so as soon as the goods were delivered to him for conveyance to them under a completed contract of sale. (4) That the possession proved in this case at the time of seizure is the possession of B. K. Paul & Co., and not the possession of the accused. (5) That to prove transport, you must prove direct connection of the accused with the act of transport.

The first point gives rise to a question of law which is of extreme difficulty and importance but in the view we take, it is not necessary to the decision of this appeal. In Act VII of 1878 (B. C.), exciseable articles are defined as including spirituous and fermented liquors and intoxicating drugs as defined by this Act.

Fermented liquor includes malt liquor of all kinds, tari, fresh or fermented, pachwai, diluted or undiluted, and any other intoxicating liquor which the Local Government may from time to time declare to be included in this definition.

Spirituous liquor includes any spirituous liquor imported into India or manufactured in India by any process of distillation.

Now, in the case of Gonesh Chundra Sikdar v. Queen-Empress (1), Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ., held that "spirituous liquor" in section 53 of the Act is not intended to include a medicinal preparation merely because it is a liquid substance containing alcohol in its composition. The case would be different if alcohol was manufactured separately for the purpose of being used in the preparation of a medicine.

They point out that the term "spirituous liquor" is not defined in the Act. What is given as the definition of the term is, strictly speaking, no definition at all. It merely says "spirituous liquor includes, etc.," as above. But we observe that the medicinal preparation there under consideration was manufactured from gur or treacle mixed with other ingredients used for medicinal purposes. The Judges say the case would have been different if the accused had been found manufacturing alcohol or spirits separately for the purpose of being used in the preparation of a medicine. But what was found to have been manufactured in that case by the processes of fermentation and distillation is not alcohol or spirit separately, but the compound substance, the medicine, at once.

(1) 24 C. 157.

Again, in an unreported case, the judgment in which is filed with the record before us. Criminal Revision No. 180 of 1892, O'Kinealy and Ameer Ali, JJ., held that spirits of wine sold by a chemist for medicinal purposes was not liable under the Excise Act. They rely on section 66 of that Act and then they say that rectified spirits of wine is a drug largely used in making up other drugs, and if a chemist sells it bona fide as a medical drug and as a medical drug only, he is not liable. In the case before us, the articles are tinctures prescribed by the British Pharmacopœia and there is no doubt as to their being bona fide medicinal preparations. Now, in the new Excise Act, B. C., Act V of 1909, a definition of liquor has been given and "exciseable article" has been defined as any liquor or intoxicating drug as defined by or under this Act. We have nothing to do with intoxicating drugs and have only to see what the definition of liquor is and that definition runs as follows: Liquor means intoxicating liquor, and includes spirits of wine, spirit, wine, tari, pachwai, beer, all liquid consisting of or containing alcohol and any substance which the Local Government may, by notification, declare to be liquor for the purposes of this Act.

It will be observed that the only defining words in this clause are "Liquor means intoxicating liquor" and the rest of the clause is open to the observations made by the Judges in Gonesh Chandra Sikdar's case (1). That the clause covers spirits of wine which is in itself, apart from its medicinal use, a liquor which can be drunk as an intoxicating liquor, there can be no doubt and the decision in the unreported case we referred to above has, therefore, been clearly overruled. But that Gonesh Chandra Sikdar's case (1) is no longer good law is not so clear. To be an exciseable article liquor must be intoxicating liquor and the enumeration of all the liquids that follow does not make them liquor unless they are intoxicating. Now, none of these drugs before us could conceivably be used as an intoxicating liquor. The poisonous drugs they contain would kill a man long before he had taken a sufficient quantity of alcohol to intoxicate him and we can hardly think that the Legislature can have intended to penalize the use of a beneficent drug like Sweet Spirits of Nitre, which has saved the lives of thousands of children and is the basis of all the most efficient fever mixtures in this country, where malaria is the greatest scourge. The real object of this prosecution is to prevent smuggling of drugs prepared in French territory with French spirits in Bond into British territory. This can be effected under the customs law; it is idle to urge that the Government cannot afford to keep up a customs station if necessary on the French frontier.

As a matter of fact, it would be wholly unnecessary inasmuch as there is a Customs establishment at Hughly and the Station Master at Chandernagore, which station is in British territory, could be empowered to detain all articles exported from French territory, just as local Post Masters are empowered in respect of the parcel post, and have them examined, if suspected to contain articles liable to duty. It so happens that the customs duty on drugs containing alcohol is exactly the same as that levied on exciseable articles. The matter being res integra, we should be inclined to hold that the meaning of the Legislature in amending the Act was to prevent chemists and vendors of drugs selling intoxicating liquors or otherwise dealing with them as medicinal preparations.

It, in effect, says you shall not sell brandy or gin or other intoxicating spirits because they are included in the British Pharmacopœia under the name of Spiritus Vini Gallici or Spiritus Juniperi, etc., nor shall you by merely mixing a little cinnamon or other harmless medicament with spirits palm off an exciseable article as a bona fide medicine, and as one instance you shall not sell that exceedingly dangerous intoxicant, rectified spirits of wine, as a medicine without a license, or transport it without a permit.

The argument that unfermented tari is not an intoxicating liquor does not help the prosecution inasmuch as that was also an exciseable article under the old Act, and as it is impossible to say when it may become intoxicating by a natural process of fermentation over which the owner has no control, the Legislature has very rightly declared it to be an intoxicating liquor from the first, as it is undoubtedly a potentially intoxicating liquor in its nature.

A rather curious argument which was adduced by the prosecution may be glanced at here since it may be re-produced in other cases unless disposed of once for all.

This is that "Juice drawn from any cocoanut" is mentioned and the astounding argument is put forward that this refers to the milk of the cocoanut itself whereas it is obviously to be read with the word "tree" the words being any cocoanut, palmyra, date or other kind of palm tree, and means the juice of the palm tree of whatever species and not its fruit.

A much stronger argument is derivable from the fact that "denatured spirit" is treated as an exciseable article and is subject to duty under the Act. "Denatured" means effectually and permanently rendered unfit for human consumption. But it may be that "denatured spirit" is only exciseable by virtue of the notification which makes it liquor. It certainly is not intoxicating liquor and would not be exciseable but for the special notification. Had it been necessary for the decision of this appeal to come to a finding whether all drugs, bona fide prepared in accordance with the British or other recognized pharmacopœias, were exciseable merely because alcohol is used in their preparation, we should have felt it our duty to refer the question to a Full Bench in this form:—"Does the change in the law enacted in Act V, B. C. of 1909, make the decision in Gonesh Chandra Sikdar v. Queen-Empress (1) no longer sound law?"

The argument that the notifications of the Board treat all spirits used in the preparation of drugs as exciseable articles has no force.

If the law is as we have above indicated, those notifications would be ultra vires if they said that the spirit found in the prepared drugs rendered the drugs themselves exciseable. But they are careful to say nothing of the kind.

In the notification under section 4, a new clause (h), dated 6th January 1911, says that perfumed spirits and spirits used in drugs, medicines or chemicals, whether manufactured in India or imported from foreign countries, shall be taxed (if liable to taxation) as foreign and not as country liquor.

This cannot affect the question though it may indicate that the Board of Revenue takes a different view of the law to what we do. That this is so is patent from a letter on the record from Personal Assistant to the Excise Commissioner pointing out, in answer to a question from the Indian Pharmacy, that all their tinctures are liable to excise duty when imported into British India unless they can prove that the spirit used is foreign liquor and has paid the full duty imposed thereon by the Indian Tariff Act or the Bengal Excise Act. But this is rather discounted by another letter from the same gentleman to the Collector of Hughly in which he says that the Ipecacuanha Wine and Tincture of Bryonia, manufactured by Moti Lal Chandra of Chandernagore, are proved by analysis to be of a strength of 100·38, 54 or 61·46 U. P. and 6·40 U. P. respectively and that they are, therefore, spirits and not medicines.

This seems to admit that if they were bona fide medicines, as the articles in this case admittedly are, they would not be liable.

Then, there is the notification under section 19 imposing certain rates of duty upon spirits used in drugs, medicines, etc., which is Rs. 7-13 per proof gallon. This does not either affect the question. The spirits are undoubtedly exciseable but the finished drugs are apparently, in the view we have expressed, not so. About 3 annas 6 pies would have to be laboriously collected on each bottle of tincture after analysis and the duty would be impossible to collect. The procedure adopted in the firm of Messrs. David Waldie, who have a manufactory of drugs similar to the French one in British territory at Serampore, has been described to us at our request by the learned Counsel, Mr. P. L. Roy, for the Crown. We must here express our full appreciation of the very able and exhaustive way in which he dealt with the legal difficulties that arise in this case and the great help he gave us in elucidating them. It appears that the spirits used by them go up in bond so that no customs duty is paid, but Messrs. Waldie, by arrangement with Government, pay excise duties on the finished tinctures on a declaration which Government accepts that so much spirit goes to each gallon of tincture. This arrangement is, no doubt, convenient with a large firm having a permanent location at a British Excise headquarter but it does not show that the finished drugs are exciseable articles. It only shows that by special engagement, Messrs. Waldie & Co. pay the duties on the spirits used after the drugs issue from their factory and not before as they are liable to do. Obviously, this could not be done in the case of a small retail trade or of small imports from foreign territory made at odd times.

In the latter case, the Customs must intervene and this brings us to the contention which Counsel for the Crown necessarily had to make that the decision of the learned second Presidency Magistrate was erroneous when he held that the accused could not be convicted of importing. The learned Magistrate bases his contention, quite rightly in our opinion, on the wording of section 9, sub-section (2). It is argued that the words "was liable on imporation to duty" import the condition that the duty has been paid. But as the Magistrate points out, there is a clear distinction between imports and articles exported or transported. The customs are supposed to look after imports of non-exciseable articles and articles which are subject both to customs and excise.

If such articles escape the Customs, they can be dealt with by the Excise Authorities either in transport or when an attempt is made to export them, but the excise duty on imports does not apply to articles that are liable to a similar duty in the customs. In other words, two import duties cannot be charged and it is not the business of the Excise to inquire whether customs have been paid until transport begins and the Inland Revenue is affected.

It is perfectly clear that these articles ought to have been dealt with by the Customs Authorities but because this was not done, the accused are not thereby rendered liable to punishment under the Excise Act. As regards the exemptions notified under section 90 of the Act, it is clear that the Board intended to exempt only such articles as had paid duty under section 10 and wished to take powers to tax the spirit contained in tinctures which had not already paid duty. There is no doubt that such spirit can be taxed in transport or export but that does not make the drugs exciseable articles. Supposing the alcohol had been destroyed or masked by some chemical process in making the drug, it is clear from the wording of all the notifications that it is separated spirit and not the combined drug that is exciseable. If, as we are inclined to hold, these drugs are not exciseable articles, the Customs are the only authority that can deal with them. But assuming for the purposes of this case that they are exciseable articles, we have now to see whether the present accused can be said to have transported them and whether at the time of their seizure at 16, China Bazar Lane, they were in the possession of the accused. We think both these questions must be answered in the negative.

Section 46 says "if any person transports" and section 55, which is the section relied on to make the owner or person interested liable by implication, only applies to manufacture, sale or possession. It does not apply to import, transport, or export. It is section 56 which makes the holder of a license, permit or pass liable for the misconduct of his servant or agent in matters of import, transport or export and it is not contended that the accused are the holders of licenses, permits or passes. The persons actually engaged in the transport are the Manager, Siddeshwar, who ordered it and the Barahmin, Tarini Charan Mookerjee, who carried it out. It is faintly suggested that accused No. 2 might be charged with abetment of transport inasmuch as he took the order for the supply of the goods. But, to begin with, that is not what he is charged with, nor does the act of taking an order for foreign goods constitute an abetment of their transport though it might be an abetment of their import.

We do not think that the evidence is at all sufficient to make out that this Tarini Charan Mookerjee was a servant in the employ of the Indian Pharmacy, though he may have been a person acting on behalf of Siddeshwar, the Manager, and of B. K. Paul & Co. as a kind of go-between in this illicit trade.

It is in evidence that this Tarini Charan Mookerjee only personally conveyed goods to B. K. Paul & Co., though he countersigned the consignment notes addressed to other firms.

Now, the consignor being in French territory and not coming to the station himself to forward the goods, it is the practice of the Railway not to accept his signature on the consignment bill unless it is counter-signed by some person who knows him. The counter-signature of his own servant would obviously be of very little value to the Railway Company and it must, therefore, be held that the Railway authorities regarded him as an independent witness not in the sole employ of the Indian Pharmacy. It is clear that B. K. Paul & Co. alone derived benefit from this importation without duty from French territory. They had been carrying it on for some years and their managers must be regarded as accomplices. We cannot, therefore, place any reliance on their unsupported statements that T. C. Mookerjee was the Sircar of the Indian Pharmacy, which, they aver, they learnt from the accused themselves. The evidence of the Deputy Inspector of Excise, Hem Chander Banerjee, who was employed to watch accused No. 2 and saw him in a number of Chemists' shops canvassing his wares, is clear that he does not remember any other shop than B. K. Paul's that was supplied through T. C. Mookerjee. For the same reason, we cannot accept their evidence that delivery had not been taken of the goods which form the subject-matter of this case, and that the price of this consignment was still under discussion and a dispute still going on as to the presentation of the bill. The evidence is half-hearted and inconsistent and it is perfectly clear from the admissions made that the discussion of prices that Mr. Wilson found going on, was with regard to the proposed tender for a large order by an up-country Government and that accused said they could execute it at a lower rate than that quoted by other firms, or in their own price lists if a large quantity was ordered.

Their price lists had been with B. K. Paul & Co., for years and there is no evidence that they had ever been disputed. They had ordered the goods, and accepted them and were in possession both in law and fact. The mere presence of an agent of the seller to see that the goods are in order when opened does not keep the sale uncompleted. It is a common practice for wine merchants to indemnify their customers for bottles broken in transit but that does not prevent the property passing to the consignee when delivery has been taken. We find on the evidence that the accused were not in possession, either actual or potential, of the incriminating articles.

That being so, the convictions and sentences must be set aside and the fines, if paid, must be refunded.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 52 OF 1912.

April 13, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis.

SAMANDA—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 439—Bad livelihood, security for—Proof.

The following circumstances are not sufficient to place a person on security under section 110 of Act V of 1898, especially where these circumstances are shown to have occurred about a year after dismissal of that person's complaint of bribe-taking against two Police Sub-Inspectors of the Ilaqa in which he lives:—

(1) Two successful searches of his house.

(2) His having been seen in the company of some suspected persons none of whom has ever been convicted of theft.

(3) Allegations of some Safedposhes and Lambardars to the effect that people of their villages know him to be a badmash, while no one has ever suspected him in a theft case.

Petition for revision, under section, 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of the District Magistrate, Ferozepore, dated 20th October 1911.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Samanda, has been ordered by the District Magistrate to find two sureties for Rs. 500 for good behaviour for three years, or to undergo three years' simple imprisonment.

The Sub-Inspector speaks of two cases, one a case in which one Sardara was the person named as suspected, but in which the petitioner's house was searched (this was in July 1911), and the other in which one Gahna was suspected and it was said that Gahna had been seen with petitioner one day before the offence, and it was also said that Ghana's brother, Dhera, lived with petitioner, (this is a recent case).

Some Lambardars and Safedposhes depose that petitioner's house has been twice searched. One says he has seen Sardara and Dehra in company with petitioner. The Lambardars also say that the people of their villages know petitioner to be a badmash.

It is to be noted that in May 1910, a charge brought by Samanda and another against two Sub-Inspectors of receiving bribes was dismissed by the District Magistrate.

The present evidence is, in my opinion, quite insufficient to warant security being demanded. No complainant seems ever to have named the petitioner as suspected. Though his house has been twice searched by the Police since the above charge of bribe taking was dismissed, nothing of a suspicious character seems to have been found. He is alleged to have been seen in company with Sardara and Dhera, but it is not shown that either of these persons has ever been convicted. Several of the prosecution witnesses seem to have very little personal knowledge of the petitioner; e. g., Gharib Khan says he knows petitioner by sight. If the Police search a man's house, whenever a theft occurs, no doubt uncharitable people will come to the opinion that the man is a bad character, but something more is wanted than a couple of unsuccessful searches and vague allegations of bad livelihood.

I accept this application and set aside the order of the District Magistrate and cancel the security.

MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION No. 453 OF 1911.

December 19, 1911.

Present:—Mr. Piggott, J. C.

HARI PADO MOZAMDAR, THROUGH DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, RAE BARELI—APPLICANT

LACHMI NARAIN MARWARI—OPPTSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—High Court, jurisdiction of—Extension of the period of sanction to prosecute—District Magistrate wishing to take cognizance of offence committed within his jurisdiction can move for extension of period of six months.

A High Court has jurisdiction to extend the period of six months for which a sanction granted by a Subordinate Court, under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, may remain in force, even though such extension is granted after the period of six months has expired.

Kali Kinkar Sett v. Dinobandhu Nundy, 32 C. 379, 9 C. W. N. 321; 2 Cr. L. J. 106, dissented from.

In re Muthukudam Pillai, 26 M. 190; Karuppana Servagaran v. Sinna Gounden, 26 M. 480, followed.

Where sanction to prosecute under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, for an offence against public justice is granted to a private person and the District Magistrate, within whose jurisdiction the offence has been committed, desires to take cognizance of the offence, the latter can move the Court to extend the prescribed period of six months.

Upon a complaint being filed on the strength of the sanction as it stands, it will be for the prosecution to satisfy the Court that the sanction is not being taken advantage of by the District Magistrate against the wish or without the authority of the person in whose favour it was originally granted.

Appeal against the order of the Munsif, Rae Bareli, dated 14th November 1911.

Messrs. St. George Jackson, Ali Ausat, Muhammad Afzal, and Shahab-ud-din, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application raises two distinct points. The first is whether the time for which a sanction granted, under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can remain in force can be extended by order of the High Court, such order being passed after the period of six months, referred to in section 195, clause 6 of the said Code, has expired. In the case of Kali Kinkar Sett v. Dinobandhu Nundy (1), three Judges of the Calcutta High Court expressed the opinion that the time cannot be extended when it has expired. The point was not essential to the determination of the case then before the Court; the Honourable Judges do not discuss it at any length and give no reason for their view beyond expressing the opinion that when the time has expired, there is nothing to extend. In the present case, the order of sanction was passed on the 22nd of December 1910. On May 10th, 1911, while that order was still in force, this Court passed a formal order staying all proceedings under the said sanction. The application in revision, in the course of which this stay-order was passed, was not disposed of until August 17th, 1911, by which time the period of six months reckoned from the 22nd of December 1910 had expired. There has been no unreasonable delay in bringing this matter before this Court; what the complainant did was to move the Court, which originally granted the sanction, to extend the time or to give him a fresh sanction, and this he did by an application presented on the 5th of September 1911.

(1) 32 C. 379; 9 C. W. N. 321; 2 Cr. L. J. 106.

That application was eventually dismissed because the Court concerned was of opinion that under the provisions of section 195, clause 6, this Court alone had jurisdiction to pass any order which would have the effect of extending the period of six months for which a sanction once granted can remain in force. I think the view taken by the learned Munsif of Rae Bareli is substantially correct. I do not desire to pronounce any opinion as to whether it might not be lawful, under certain circumstances, for a Court to grant a fresh sanction to prosecute upon an application made by a different person, after a sanction granted in favour of the person, who first applied for the same, had been permitted to lapse. If, however, a subordinate Court were held competent at any time to grant a fresh sanction in favour of the very same person who had already received an order of sanction, which he had permitted to lapse by reason of his not availing himself of the same for a period of six months, it is obvious that the purpose of the proviso to section 195, clause 6 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, would be defeated. The object of that proviso is that a person, who has once obtained an order of sanction from a competent Court, must avail himself of the same within six months, unless he can obtain from the High Court, for good cause shown, an order extending the time. The Legislature has seen fit to reserve to the High Court alone the question of the propriety of granting such extension, and the learned Munsif was undoubtedly right in declining to pass any order which would have the effect of nullifying this reservation. With all respect to the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, I am of opinion that their decision proceeds upon too strict and technical an interpretation of the words "extend the time." I have before me an order of sanction, dated December 22nd, 1910, which would remain in force under the law up to the 22nd of June 1911. The Legislature has left it entirely to the power and discretion of this Court whether or not the period for which this order of sanction remains in force shall be extended beyond the second of these dates. It has nowhere limited the power of the High Court by saying that such order of extension must necessarily be passed before the period of six months has expired. In this particular case, the period prescribed by law expired at a time when no action could have been taken under the sanction by reason of this Court's stay-order of May 10th, 1911. In passing that stay-order, this Court virtually assumed responsibility for seeing that no consequences prejudicial to the interests of justice resulted from the same. In finally disposing of the application for revision on August 17th, 1911, the learned Judicial Commissioner expressly found that it was very desirable that Lachmi Narain, the opposite party in this case, should be placed on his trial under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code.

The circumstances of this case are peculiar, and I am satisfied that the long delay, which has taken place before the institution of the prosecution, which this Court considered to be very desirable, has been due to the proceedings taken by Lachmi Narain himself to contest and impede the action of the Courts at every possible stage. Authority against the ruling of the Calcutta High Court is to be found in the two Madras cases from which that Court expressly dissented, namely, In re Muthukudam Pillai (2) and Karuppana Servagaran v. Sinna Gounden (3). I am content to follow those rulings and to hold that it is within the jurisdiction of a High Court to pass an order extending the period of six months, for which a sanction, granted by a subordinate Court under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, may remain in force, even though such order be passed after the period of six months has expired.

The other point raised before me is that the present application is not one presented by or on behalf of the person in whose favour the order of sanction, dated December 22nd, 1910, was passed. As I have already remarked, the circumstances of this case are peculiar. The offence alleged is that of fraudulently or dishonestly making a false claim in a Court of justice under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code. The claim in question was a suit brought by a resident of the Rae Bareli District against a resident of Calcutta. After this suit had been withdrawn, an application for sanction to prosecute was duly made by the defendant against whom the suit had been brought. It is clear, however, that the matter came at an early stage under the notice of the District Magistrate of Rae Bareli, who saw reason to believe that an offence against public justice had been committed within his jurisdiction and that he ought to interest himself in the prosecution of the said offence. At certain stages in the proceedings, the original applicant for sanction was represented by the Government Pleader of the Rae Bareli District, who was also acting under instructions given him by the Deputy Commissioner of the District in his capacity of District Magistrate. At the hearing of the application for revision, which was disposed of by this Court's order of August 17th, 1911, the learned Government Pleader for Oudh appeared to oppose the application under instructions from the District Magistrate, and did not even think it worth his while to place on the record the power-of-attorney, which he held on behalf of Hari Pado Mozamdar, though I am informed and am satisfied that he in fact held such a power-of-attorney. The application, made to the Court of first instance on September the 5th, 1911, was presented on behalf of Hari Pado Mozamdar by Babu Janki Prasad, Government Pleader, on the strength of the power-of-attorney with which he was furnished at the time the original application for sanction was filed, though the said Government Pleader was also acting under instructions from the District Magistrrte. I think it probable that some difficulties might have been avoided if the District Magistrate had seen fit to apply in his official capacity for a fresh sanction in his own favour, or to move the Court concerned to take action under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Nevertheless, as the case now stands, I am not satisfied that the matter is not properly before me, or that I am bound further to delay these proceedings upon purely technical grounds. The position is this:—The District Magistrate of Rae Bareli desires to take cognizance of an offence against public justice which he sees reason to believe has been committed within his jurisdiction. He is debarred from doing so by reason of the first clause of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He knows that a sanction to prosecute which would remove this bar has been granted by a competent Court, but that this sanction is no longer valid unless an order extending the prescribed period of six months can be obtained from this Court. I think that he is not outside his jursdiction in moving this Court to extend that period, whether it be said that he does so in his official capacity, or that he is acting on behalf of the original applicant for sanction. Upon a complaint being filed on the strength of the sanction as it stands, I agree with the learned Judges, who decided the case of Jogendra Nath Mukerjee v. Sarat Chandra Banerjee (4), that it will be for the prosecution to satisfy the Court that this sanction is not being taken advantage of by the District Magistrate against the wish or without the authority of Hari Pado Mozamdar in whose favour it was originally granted. This is a possible difficulty which might perhaps have been avoided if the District Magistrate had adopted one of the other courses which I have suggested; but as the matter now stands before me, I can only accept or reject the application made for extension of the time allowed in respect of the original sanction of December 22nd, 1910. For the reasons given, I hold that I have authority to extend that period, and that I have jurisdiction to do so on the application as it now stands before me. A reasonable period to allow would, in my opinion, be a period of six months from the 17th of August 1911, the date on which Lachmi Narain's application in revision was dismissed by this Court. I accordingly order, under section 195, clause 6, Code of Criminal Procedure, that the time allowed for the institution of a prosecution under the order of December 22nd, 1910, be, and it is hereby, extended to the 17th of February 1912.

(2) 26 M. 190.
(3) 26 M. 480.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 220 OF 1911.

January 23, 1912.

versus

LAKHMICHAND—NON-APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 256, 257—Warrant case—Practice—Prosecution witnesses re-called for cross-examination—Case postponed to suit convenience of Court—Accused not liable for expenses of witness—Accused when to be called on to enter on his defence.

Where an accused person seeks to exercise the right given by section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, of re-calling prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, he cannot legally be required to deposit the expenses likely to be incurred by the witnesses who attend for such cross-examination.

Iswar Chunder v. Kali Kumar, 4 C. W. N. 351 and Amin Chand v. King-Emperor, 12 P. R. 1907 Cr.; 32 P. W. R. 1907 Cr.: 6 Cr.L.J. 339; 45 P.L.R. 1908, followed.

Where, in order to suit the convenience of the Court or for reasons connected with the discharge of public business, the witnesses for the prosecution are allowed to leave before a charge is framed or the right conferred by section 256 exercised, they must be required to attend again and ordinarily any expenses which may be allowed them on this score should be paid by Government in warrant cases.

In warrant-cases, the hearing should be continued from day to day until the prosecution witnesses have been cross-examined by the accused; and the witnesses should not be discharged until the Court has ascertained whether their cross-examination after the charge is desired.

An accused person should not be called on to enter on his defence before he has cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution who are in attendance.

Revision against the order passed by the Magistrate, 1st Class, Nagpur, dated the 21st September 1911.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The case, out of which this application arises, has already been before this Court which, on the 28th November last, refused to transfer it from the Court of Khan Sahib Elijah Jacob: see Miscellaneous Petition No. 27 of 1911.

The present applicants were prosecuted on a complaint for defamation, an offence punishable with imprisonment for two years. By reason of the definition of "warrant-case" in section 4 (w), Criminal Procedure Code, their trial is governed by Chapter XXI of the Code. The examination-in-chief of the complainant's witnesses concluded on the 15th August 1911. The Counsel for the defence then desired to cross-examine those witnesses, but the Magistrate considered it doubtful whether permission to do so should be granted at that stage and adjourned the hearing to consider the point. At the next hearing, the Counsel did not appear at the beginning of the day, and one of the accused briefly cross-examined one witness only. The Magistrate declined to wait for the Counsel, so the cross-examination ceased, the accused were examined and all were charged with having defamed the complainant. The accused were next asked if they wished to cross examine any witnesses for the prosecution and replied in the affirmative. Their Counsel then appeared and partly cross-examined one witness. The hearing was then adjourned to the 19th September, the Magistrate having been sent for by the Deputy Commissioner. On the 19th September, the parties asked for a day's time as a compromise was in contemplation. The next day, though the witnesses for both sides were in attendance, the Magistrate announced his inability to take up the case on any day in September and fixed the 30th October for the next hearing, directing also that all witnesses in attendance should be bound over to attend on that day. On the 20th September, the Magistrate further ordered orally that the accused should pay diet-money to the complainant's witnesses required for cross-examination; they paid in Rs. 76-15-0 accordingly, but, on the following day, put in an application protesting that such payment could not legally be demanded of them. The Magistrate then repeated his order and put it in writing.

The accused having moved this Court to set this order aside as unwarranted by law, the District Magistrate was called upon to show cause. He has now reported that the Magistrate acted under the mistaken impression that section 257 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, applied, whereas the section really applicable is 256.

The Magistrate's mistake appears to have been the outcome of two others, one committed by himself and the other by the accused. The former consisted in his calling on the accused to enter on their defence before they had cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution who were in attendance. The latter appears in paragraph

2 of the application whereby the accused moved the Magistrate to recall his order of the 20th September; in that application, which is signed by a Pleader, the desired cross-examination was described as authorized by section 257, Criminal Procedure Code.

It seems to me clear that the Magistrate could not make section 257 applicable by his own illegal action in calling prematurely upon the accused to enter on their defence. There is nothing in section 256 of the Code corresponding to sub-section (2) of section 257, and it is to be observed that the latter provision covers only those cases in which summons for procuring the attendance of a witness is needed: should the witness be in Court, the obvious and proper course is to cross-examine him at once. In the present case, the Magistrate had before him the witnesses to be cross-examined, and his sole reason for postponing the process was that he had revenue cases which called more urgently for disposal. Assuming this postponement to have been justifiable on public grounds, it was, in any view of the law, unreasonable to make the accused pay for it. As authorities for the proposition that where an accused seeks to exercise the right of cross-examination conferred by section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, he cannot legally be required to deposit the expenses likely to be incurred by the witnesses, who will attend for cross-examination, I may refer to Iswar Chunder v. Kali Kumar (1) and Amin Chand v. King-Emperor (2). As explained in the latter case, the procedure contemplated by the Criminal Precedure Code for warrant-cases is that the prosecution witnesses should be examined in chief, the accused examined, the charge framed and the prosecution witnesses cross-examined at one hearing continued, if necessary, from day to day, and the said witnesses should not be discharged until the Court has ascertained whether their cross-examination after the charge will be desired. I would also refer to section 254 of the Code which makes it clear that a charge may be framed before all the evidence available for the prosecution has been recorded. Where in order to suit the convenience of the Court or for reasons connected with the discharge of other public business, the witnesses for the prosecution are allowed to leave before the charge has been framed or the right conferred by section 256 exercised, they must be required to attend again and ordinarily any expenses which may be allowed them on this score should be paid by Government. There is nothing in Chapter XXI of the Code which enables the Magistrate to demand even from a complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses, though such a power is conferred by section 244 (3) where the case under trial is a summons-case.

The order complained of is illegal and is hereby set aside. The sum improperly realised from the applicants (accused) will be refunded to them by the Government.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 200 OF 1912.

April 20, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Robertson.

MANI RAM—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Stolen property—Defective identification—Interference in revision—Irrelevency of statement of person not examined in Court.

Where a stolen article is of ordinary make and there is nothing peculiar in it, the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant of ordinary position as to its identification is not sufficient for finding that it does not belong to the accused, specially where it has been equally contradicted by a witness on the other side.

Even a unanimous finding of fact by the lower Courts, without due regard to the evidence on the record, is liable to be set aside on revision under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of Sessions Judge, Hissar Division, dated the 6th January 1912, affirming that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Rohtak, dated the 9th November 1911, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The weak spot in this case is the absence of any identification of any stolen property in the possession of Mani Ram.

The articles said to have been so found are a toe ring and an arsi or glass. The learned Sessions Judge in his judgment says: "Nothing was found with Hardwari, but out of the jewellery found in possession of Mani Ram, the complainant identified a toe ring and an arsi glass as his own. As to the other things, he referred them to his wife. His wife did not identify other things but she also was sure about the foot toe ring and the glass. The question is whether the statement of the Patwari and his wife are true and whether there was anything peculiar in these two things for identification. I have not the least doubt about the Patwari's statement being true. He could easily make the same statement about other things but he did not do so.

"As to the identification, the make of the ring is of a special artistic nature.

"The Patwari's wife being from Lucknow, the ring was of the fashion there and of the make not common in this part of the country; she could at once, therefore, identify the ring."

To my astonishment, I found that complainant's wife had not been called and that there was no evidence of hers upon the record. Yet the Sessions Judge dealt with the case as if the wife had made a statement in Court! This is, indeed, strange.

There remains nothing except the identification by Kanshi Ram of the toe ring and the arsi. The arsi appears to have been quite incapable of identification and as to the toe ring, said to be of Lucknow make, the wife of Kanshi Ram was not called to identify it though the Sessions Judge writes as if she had been and the ring is claimed as his by one Hazari.

It is quite impossible to maintain a conviction upon such very flimsy evidence as the uncorroborated evidence as to identification of Kanhsi Ram. I note also in regard to the claim by Hazari that the first Court said "Hazari was not produced." He was, however, produced and swears to the ring being his. It is impossible, under these circumstances, to support the conviction.

I set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the accused and direct that he be discharged from bail forthwith.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 411 OF 1911.

February 21, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Piggott, J. C., and Mr. Lindsay A. J. C.

RAGHUNANDAN AND OTHERS—ACCUSED

versus

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT.

Animal, wild, when it can be property of pursuer—Unlawful assembly, member of, lying unconscious from the outset, not charged with offence committed by others during his unconscious state—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 148, 149, 304.

In order to render an animal feræ naturæ the property of any person, there must be a complete capture, the result of which is to reduce the animal completely into possession. Mere pursuit, short of capture, will not do, and so long as it is possible for the animal to escape, it cann tobe said that there is such a reduction into possession as makes the animal the property of the pursuer. The mere fact of the accused's dog overtaking an animal and pulling it down, does not preclude the possibility of escape so as to make the animal his property.

Where it was found that A., a member of an unlawful assembly, was felled to the ground at the outset and was left lying unconscious on the spot where the fight started, while the remaining members of A.'s party pursued the persons, one of whom had knocked A. down, and having overtaken them committed the offence of culpable homicide:—

Held, that A., who was lying unconscious, could not be considered a member of the unlawful assembly at the time the offence of culpable homicide was committed and was, therefore, not liable to conviction on this charge.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated 17th November 1911.

Mr. St. G Jackson, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The five appellants in this case have been convicted in the Sessions Court at Hardoi of offences under sections 148 and 304/149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to long periods of imprisonment. The case is a difficult one and involves several points which, for the reasons I am about to state, render it desirable that the appeal be heard by a Bench of two Judges. As stated by the learned Judge in his judgment, there appears to be no doubt that a great deal of the prosecution evidence put forward against the accused was absolutely false. The facts as found by the learned Judge appear to be as follows:—

The five accused are residents of the village of Rohilia; and it is that, on the morning of the 21st August, they were chasing a wild deer with a dog. The deer was eventually pulled down in a field belonging to the neighbouring village of Badruddinpur, where it was despatched with lathis by some of the Badruddinpur men, who were working on the spot at the time. After killing the animal, it would seem that the Badruddinpur people attempted to carry off the carcass when the accused appeared upon the scene. An altercation ensued, the Rohilia men claiming that the animal belonged to them, while the Badruddinpur people wanted it for themselves. In the course of this altercation, the accused appellant, Ganga Singh, is said to have aimed a blow with his lathi at one of the Badruddinpur men—a man named Bija Pasi. The witnesses say that Bija warded off the blow. The next thing that happened was that Ganga Singh was felled to the ground by one of the Badruddinpur party. After he dropped, one of the accused, Pima Singh, is said to have knocked down with his lathi a Badruddinpur man, named Kunwar Dhobi. Both Kunwar and Bija died as the result of injuries received in this encounter. The case for the prosecution was not that Bija was wounded out in the fields where the altercation first arose. It was said that sometime after when Bija had returned to his house, a party of Rohilia men, including the accused and others, went into Bija's house in the village of Badruddinpur and hammered him to death. This story has been rejected as absolutely untrue by the learned Judge, and, in my opinion, rightly, for it is altogether inconsistent with what was observed by the medical officer who conducted the post mortem examination and who found only one mark of injury on Bija's head which would account for the fact of his death. So far as Kunwar Dhobi's case is concerned too, it would appear that he also bore only one mark of injury on the head—an injury which proved fatal. It may also be noted that the accused Ganga Singh was examined several days after the date of the occurrrence by the Civil Surgeon. He was then found to be still in a dazed condition and to be suffering from paralysis of the tongue. I gather from the judgment that the learned Judge was of opinion that both Bija and Kunwar received their injuries on the spot. He has convicted the five accused under section 304, read with section 149, of the Indian Penal Code, and also under section 143. I presume the charge under section 304, covers the causing of the death of both men, namely, Bija and Kunwar, though this is not expressly stated in the judgment. Mr. Jackson, who has argued the case very ably on behalf of the appellants, raises a plea of self-defence, and contends that, as the accused were acting in the protection of their property, they committed no offence. According to him, the carcass of this wild deer had become the property of the Rohilia men, who were entitled to defend it as against the theft attempted to be committed by the Badruddinpur people in carrying it off. He pleads that the animal, though feræ naturæ, had been reduced into possession of the accused, and was consequently property which was capable of being the subject of theft. This is a question of some nicety, though I may say I am disposed to think that the learned Judge's opinion is correct, and that the fact that the accused's dog had pulled the animal down did not constitute such a reduction into possession as made the animal the property of the accused. This is one point which I think might well be considered by the Bench. Another point of law which seems to me to deserve consideration arises in connection with the conviction of Ganga Singh under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. The point was not raised by Mr. Jackson himself, but it struck me rather forcibly while the case was at hearing. It seems to me fairly clear that before either of the deceased men had been actually struck, Ganga Singh had been felled to the ground and was unconscious. No doubt some of the prosecution witnesses represented Ganga Singh as having got up after he fell and as having pursued Bija into the village of Badruddinpur. This story, however, is to my mind quite incredible; and, in view of the condition of Ganga Singh when he was examined five days later by the Civil Surgeon, it seems to me practically certain that Ganga Singh must have been lying unconscious on the ground after he received the blow on the skull. Turning now to section 149 of the Indian Penal Code, we find that it lays down that if an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly.....every person who, at the time of the committtng of that offence, is a member of the same assembly is guilty of that offence. Can it be said that, in the circumstances just stated, namely, that Ganga Singh was at the time, when Bija and Kunwar or either of them was struck, lying on the ground in a helpless state, he (Ganga Singh) was, at the time when the offence under section 304 was committed, a member of the unlawful assembly? A further point may arise in this way, namely, that if it be held that Ganga Singh was not at the time in question a member of the unlawful assembly, can it be said that there was, at that particular time, any unlawful assembly at all, inasmuch as, so far as the evidence appears, the number of the persons who were originally members of it had been reduced to four? For these reasons, I certify that this case should be laid before a Bench of two Judges for decision.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case have been set out in the order, dated the 29th January 1912, by which this appeal was referred for decision to a Bench of two Judges. It is not necessary, therefore, to recapitulate them. We have had the whole case argued before us by Mr. Jackson who appears for the appellants and by the Government Pleader who appears on behalf of the Crown.

The first point, with which we have to deal, is a plea of self-defence which was raised on behalf of the appellants. The form in which this plea is raised is this, namely, that as it has been found by the lower Court that the deer, which the accused appellants were pursuing, had been pulled down by their dog, it had for this reason become their property so as to entitle them to act in self-defence against any attempt made by the people of Badruddinpur to remove it. After hearing the arguments on both sides, we are satisfied that this plea cannot be sustained. In order to make out a case of self-defence in favour of the appellants, it would be necessary to establish in the first place that the deer which had been pulled down by their dog had become their property. As is stated in the referring order, the animal was one ferae naturae; and we think that, in a case of this kind, the true rule is that in order to render such an animal the property of any person, there must be a complete capture, the result of which is to reduce the animal completely into possession. Mere pursuit, short of capture, will not do, and so long as it is possible for the animal to escape, it cannot be said that there is such a reduction into possession as makes the animal the property of the pursuer. We think that, on the evidence, there can be no doubt that in this case there was no such complete capture made by the accused appellants. No doubt, their dog had overtaken the animal and succeeded in pulling it down, but that fact by itself did not preclude the possibility of escape, and we are satisfied that the animal really became the property of the Badruddinpur people, who are proved to have despatched it with their lathis. We hold, therefore, that the plea of self-defence cannot succeed.

The next point which we have to consider is the propriety of the conviction of the appellant, Ganga Singh, under section 304, read with section 149 of the Indian Penal Code. We have come to the conclusion that the conviction under these sections cannot stand. There is overwhelming evidence to show that Ganga Singh was felled to the ground immediately after the beginning of the riot; and we are satisfied that after he received the blow on the skull, he was quite incapable of any further action. We take it that what really happened was this. The appellants and the other Rohilia people who were with them came up, and observing that the animal, which they were pursuing, had been seized by the Badruddinpur people, who were preparing to take it away, resolved to rescue the carcass of the animal by force. There was thus undoubtedly an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to take away the carcass from the Badruddinpur people, whose property it had become. In pursuance of that unlawful object, Ganga Singh struck out at Bija Pasi. Bija Pasi warded off the blow and immediately felled Ganga Singh to the ground with his lathi. After this we have no doubt as to what took place. The Rohilia people, having seen one of their number laid out for dead on the ground, resolved to take vengeance upon the people of Badruddinpur and with that object, they pursued these people to their village. Kunwar Dhobi was struck down in the course of this pursuit; and we think that the truth is that Bija was overtaken just after he had got inside the village and was knocked down there. We have no doubt whatever that Ganga Singh was quite incapable of taking any part in the pursuit of the Baddruddinpur people. On the contrary, we think it is proved, beyond any question, that Ganga Singh was left lying unconscious on the spot where the row started. In order to establish the guilt of Ganga Singh under section 304 read with section 149, it would be necessary to show that, at the time the offence of culpable homicide was committed, Ganga Singh was a member of the unlawful assembly. We do not think it can, by any process of reasoning, be said that a man who was lying unconscious on the ground could be a member of an unlawful assembly engaged in the pursuit of persons one of whose number had knocked Ganga Singh down. We hold, therefore, that at the time the offence of culpable homicide was committed with respect to the two deceased men, Bija and Kunwar, Ganga Singh was not a member of the unlawful assembly and is, therefore, not liable to conviction on this charge.

As regards the other accused-appellants, we agree with the finding of the Court below that Jhamma, Pima, Raghunandan and Umrai were all present when the riot began and were also members of the unlawful assembly at the time when Kunwar and Bija were struck down. So far as Jhamma and Pima are concerned, it is admitted that they were present. As regards Umrai and Raghunandan, they are named by nearly all the prosecution witnesses as having come up with the Rohilia men just before the raid began. It is pointed out on behalf of the appellant, Raghunandan, that one of the witnesses, namely, Dwarka (P. W. No. 1) has stated that Raghunandan stood some 10 or 15 paces apart and did not use his lathi. This statement, however, was made with reference to what took place at the very beginning of the riot. It may be that Raghunandan was not willing to join with the other members of his party in an attempt to rescue the carcass of the deer by force. But we have no doubt whatever that as soon as Ganga Singh had been felled to the ground, Raghunandan joined in with the others when they started off to take vengeance upon the Badruddinpur people for what happened to Ganga Singh. We think it is proved that Raghunandan and Umrai both took part in the pursuit of the Badruddinpur people to their village in the course of which Kunwar and Bija came by the injuries which caused their death. It has, no doubt, been held by the Sessions Judge that the statements of all these prosecution witnesses are anything but true in their entirety. There can be no doubt that they deliberately laid themselves out to concoct the false story regarding the manner in which Bija Pasi came to be killed. At the same time, we are not prepared to reject their evidence altogether, and two of them at least have, as found by the learned Sessions Judge, given a description of the affair which, on the face of it, must be accepted as substantially correct. It is only natural to suppose that these people from Rohilia would proceed to retaliate in return for the injury caused to Ganga Singh, whom they believed to be dead at the time. So far as Jhamma, Pima and Umrai are concerned, we are of opinion that their conviction must be maintained. Their appeals are dismissed. For the reasons already given, we acquit Ganga Singh of the charge under sections 304 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code; we maintain his conviction and sentence under section 148. As for Raghunandan, we give him the benefit of the statement made by Dwarka (P. W. No. 1) and hold that he was not a member of an unlawful assembly at the time when the riot began. We acquit him of the charge under section 148, but we hold that he is proved to be guilty of the offence under sections 304 and 149, and we confirm his conviction and sentence under those sections.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 10-B OF 1911.

March 16, 1912

Present:—Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C.

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 367, 423—What an appellate judgment should contain.

The provisions of section 367, Criminal Procedure Code, are mandatory and it is no ground for violating these imperative provisions that no serious inconvenience, harm or injustice has resulted from such violation.

JAIRAM v. EMPEROR.

No judgment of a Court, other than a High Court, which purports to dispose of an appeal under section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, is a legal judgment unless it contains at least,—

(1) the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal;

(2) the decision thereon; and

(3) the reasons for the decision.

Therefore, the following judgment of an Appellate Court was held to be no judgment in law:

"There appears no sufficient reason to doubt the evidence for the prosecution. The sentence is not too heavy. The appeal is dismissed."

Revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Amraoti, dated the 26th January 1912, confirming the conviction and sentence passed by the Tahsildar and Magistrate, Second Class, Morsi, dated the 3rd January 1912.

Mr. F. W. Dillon, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the accused was convicted by a Magistrate of the Second Class, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four months and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or, in default, undergo a further term of rigorous imprisonment for 1½ months. The conviction was under section 324, Indian Penal Code, the offence found being that of causing simple hurt with a pen-knife.

Against this conviction and sentence, the accused appealed to the Court of the District Magistrate, and, on the 11th January 1912, the appeal was admitted for hearing, and the accused enlarged on bail by a District Magistrate of ripe experience and particular knowledge of the people of Berar. On the the 26th January 1912, the appeal came before a very junior officer, temporarily acting as District Magistrate, pending the arrival of the permanent successor of the District Magistrate who had admitted the appeal. He allowed the complainant to be represented by Counsel, as well as the appellant, and disposed of the appeal the same day as follows:—

"ORDER IN APPEAL.

"The alleged use of a pen-knife by Jairam is surprising, but is easily explained by the fact that he was angry and excited. There appears no sufficient reason to doubt the evidence for the prosecution. The sentence is not too heavy. The appeal is dismissed."

The application for revision now before me is mainly based on the contention that the above order is no judgment in law, and that, consequently, the disposal of the appeal was either illegal, or so irregular as to occasion a failure of justice. On behalf of the Crown, it was urged that the appeal has been legally disposed of, since the District Magistrate concurred with the first Court: and, further, that, if the order of the Appellate Court was an irregular judgment, or no judgment at all, section 537, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, as applied to Berar, saves the proceedings which ended with the order dismissing the appeal.

It seems expedient to examine the question and state, chiefly for the future guidance of the Courts below, the views of this Court thereupon. Section 367 lays down in the clearest terms what the judgment of a Criminal Court must contain, namely—

(1) the point or points for decision;

(2) the decision thereon; and

(3) the reasons for the decision.

I have no doubt that these provisions are mandatory, and that these three elements are intended to constitute the substance, as distinguished from mere form, of every legal judgment passed by any Criminal Court exercising original jurisdiction. Then section 424 of the same Code is in these terms:—

"The rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court."

These provisions of the law do not import any distrust in the Criminal Courts other than the High Court. They are designed to produce uniformity in procedure, and to ensure that the judgments of the subordinate Criminal Courts shall contain such matter as may tend to promote public confidence in their decisions, and safeguard them against the possible suggestion that cases are disposed of without proper consideration. I have not the least doubt in my own mind that the learned Magistrate, who disposed of the appeal in this case, read up the record carefully, and gave proper weight to the arguments advanced before him. But, can it be said that the accused in this case, and the generel body of the community to which he belongs, are assisted to such confidence by the terms of the order which the Magistrate gave in place of the formal judgment required by law? If unsuccessful appeals were habitually disposed of, after admission to hearing, by such orders, would that tend to promote such public confidence in our subordinate Appellate Tribunals as the due administration of criminal justice demands? I think not. Moreover, whatever may be the policy of the Legislature, there is the law; and it affords no ground for its violation that a particular digression from its imperative provisions has resulted in no serious inconvenience, harm or injustice.

I have been much pressed by the learned Standing Counsel with the decisions in Queen-Empress v. Pandeh Bhat (1) and Rohimuddi v. Queen-Empress (2). The first of these, coming as it does from a Full Bench of the Allahabad Court headed by so capable a Chief Justice as Sir John Edge, is an authority against which I venture to advance my own humble opinion with extreme diffidence. Nevertheless, that opinion is one of honest dissent, and I am bound to follow it. With the utmost deference, I make bold to assert that the Allahabad decision does not appear to be a sound exposition of the law. The learned Chief Justice, who delivered judgment on behalf of the Court, wrote thus:—

"It is difficult to lay down any rule with precision as to what judgment of an Appellate Court complies, and what judgment does not comply, with the requirements of the Code of Criminal Procedure. * * *. We are not dealing here with the case of a judgment of a Court of first instance, * * * *. In our opinion, if the Sessions Judge had simply said in his judgment:—'I dismiss this appeal'—that would not have been a judgment * * * * *.

"A judgment must contain something more than that. It must contain something to justify the order dealing with the appeal. One way to arrive at a conclusion as to what the Legislature contemplated, when enacting sections 367 and 424 of the Code, is to take a case, for example, which might occur * * *. A Magistrate has written a judgment * * *. The judgment shows that the Magistrate had before his mind what were the ingredients in law of the offence of which he convicted the accused. It shows that he had considered the evidence; that he had come to definite conclusions on that evidence; that he had given reasons for those conclusions, and that acting on those conclusions, he had found the man before him guilty of a particular offence. The case comes in appeal before a Court of Session. The Sessions Judge, after a most careful consideration, agrees with every word which the Magistrate has written and can add nothing to what appears in the Magistrate's judgment. What is he to do? * * *. It appears to us that the most reasonable course * * * * would be for the Sessions Judge in such a case to write such a judgment as the following:—'I have considered the evidence in this case and I agree with the Magistrate in his conclusions and in the reasons given for them, and, in my opinion, the sentence which he passed was a proper sentence.' It appears to us that such a judgment would be in compliance with the law and not in violation of the law. One must trust to the honour of Sessions Judges, and trust that they would not make such statements in their judgments unless they were true, in the same way as one must trust to the honour of a Sessions Judge and believe that he would not dismiss a criminal appeal unless he were satisfied that the appellant had been properly convicted of the offence and properly sentenced."

With great respect, it seems to me that there is a fallacy underlying the above reasoning, and I hope that no Court of Criminal Appellate jurisdiction subordinate to this Court will ever take the form set out in the above quotation as a model for its judgment in any case. The fallacy appears to me to lie in the assumption that, in a criminal appeal, the matter before the Appellate Court is precisely, and only, the matter which was before the first Court. This is obviously not the case. The first Court had to try the accused for the offence charged, and both parties are entitled to a judgment which shows, upon the face of it, that the 'case'—in which term I include the allegations, evidence and arguments—of both parties have been judicially considered and weighed one against the other prior to arrival at a decision. The Appellate Court has to try, not the accused, but the appeal. In every appeal at least two points are raised which can only be raised for decision in the Appellate Court, namely, (1) Is any objection raised in the memoradum of appeal a valid objection; and, if not, (2) Is there any other ground, apparent on the record, for interference in appeal? In the irreducible minimum approved by Edge, C. J., and his learned colleagues, there is no mention of a single point raised by the appellant, nor any direct decision thereon, still less is there any reasoning on the merits of any objection contained in the memorandum of appeal. In the absence of these elements, it seems to me that by such a judgment there would have been no decision of the appeal, on its merits, in the manner required for a due compliance with the terms of sections 464—cum—367 of the 1882 Code in force when the Allahabad decision was pronounced—sections that have been repeated in the 1898 Code now current. If decisions that do not comply with these sections are, nevertheless, to be accepted as valid because Judges can be trusted to act honourably, then there is no need for any judgment, properly so called, or for anything but a dispositive order, unsupported by reasons, in any case. But the Legislature has not seen fit to adopt this view. On the contrary, it appears to regard two rules as cardinal points in ensuring public confidence in the tribunals of justice, namely:—

(1) 19 A. 506.
(2) 20 C. 353.

(1) that the Judges should understand, and the parties before them should have assurance that they do understand, what questions are submitted for their decisions, and
(2) that the Judges should lay open to criticism the reasons which impel them to their conclusions.

Therefore, the Law of Procedure applies in all cases, the first, and, in all but the most summary and unimportant cases, both of the above rules to the judgments of the Courts, excepting only, in the particular case before us, the High Court.

No person convicted by a Court which makes in its judgment no mention of his defence, and of its reasons for rejecting that defence, would be satisfied with the fairness of his trial and the impartiality of his Judge. Nor would such judgment commend itself as proper and trustworthy to the general body of the community. In what better light can we expect the appellant or the public to regard an appellate judgment which does not expressly refer to, or give reasons for, non-acceptance of the several objections urged against the conclusions of the first Court? It is upon those objections that the appellant seeks decision in the Appellate Court, and the law gives him the right to have such decision once the appeal has passed the barrier of section 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The Calcutta case above cited was little more than a condonation of irregularity in a particular case. As an authority on what a judgment in decision of a criminal appeal should contain, it can be disregarded in view of the very strong chain of decisions emanating from the same authority with which it appears to conflict. I need only refer to Kamruddin v. Sonatun Mandal (3), In the matter of the petition of Ram Das Maghi (4), Farkan v. Somsher Mahomed (5), Girish Myte v. Queen-Empress (6), Ekcowri Mukerjee v. Emperor (7) and Jamait Mullick v. Emperor (8). To the same effect are the decisions in In re Shivappa (9) and Hakim Singh v. The Empress (10).

After giving the matter my best consideration, I am of opinion that no judgment of a Court, other than a High Court, which purports to dispose of an appeal under section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1893, is a legal judgment unless it contains at least—

(1) the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal;
(2) the decisions thereon; and
(3) the reasons for the decision.

Therefore, there has so far been no legal decision of the appeal in this case, and whatever other course it is open to me to pursue, I have no doubt that I have the power to remand the case for re-trial of the appeal and its disposal by a legal judgment and this is the course I have decided to adopt. The case is one calling for careful scrutiny, because there is no doubt that while the accused had a motive for hostility towards the complainant, the latter had an equally strong motive for making a false charge. The trial was somewhat superficially conducted in the first Court, and that made appellate scrutiny all the more necessary. One example will suffice. The wounds inflicted on the complainant present the very remarkable feature of all being on one limb, and all except one or two scratches on the hand were on the left upper arm just below the shoulder—apparently where they could easily have been self-inflicted with a knife held in the right hand. On the other hand, the chances against all the wounds being inflicted in such juxtaposition in the course of a struggle in which several persons were engaged in hustling one another—witness the injuries received by complainant's father Appaji (W. P. No. 4)—appear to be considerable. It is also remarkable that none of the wounds is a stab, and most of them are cuts only skin deep. A searching examination of the medical witness on this point might have helped to clear the difficulty. The only answer elicited from him on the point is absolutely worthless. Again, the complainant seems to have said that he called for help when struck with the knife, and then the witnesses came from the neighbourhood; while the witnesses appear to say that the wounding began after they got there. These are matters not to be lightly passed over in a case of this kind.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Magistrate dismissing the appeal, and direct that he do re-hear the appeal and dispose of it according to law. Pending further orders by the District Magistrate, the accused will remain on the bail already furnished.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 1153 OF 1911.
February 13, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.
JALAL-UD DIN—CONVICT—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Forgery—Evidence—Handwriting expert—Expert evidence alone insufficient for conviction—Evidence of expert how far reliable—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 467, 477—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 45, 47.

It is very unsafe, as a general rule, to base a conviction simply upon the opinion of an expert.

Panchu Mondal v. Emperor, 1 C. L. J. 385; 2 Cr. L. J. 311, Seri Kant v. Emperor, 2 A. L. J. 444; 2 Cr. L. J. 353, followed.

The evidence of a person supposed to be acquainted with the handwriting of another is not admissible under section 47, Indian Evidence Act of 1872, if he does not state facts which, according to the explanation to the section, would make his opinion relevant. Similarly, the evidence of a witness who is not positive as to identity of handwriting is of no value.

Petition for revision, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 7th August 1911, confirming that of the Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, dated the 3rd July 1911, convicting the petitioner.

Messrs. Jalal Din, Brij Lal and Nabi Bakhsh, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the petitioner Jalal Din, who was Head Establishment Clerk in the District Carriage Superintendent's Office, Lahore, from 26th August 1910 to 3rd November 1910, has been convicted in the alternative under section 467 or 477, Indian Penal Code, in respect of two settlement Bills No. 523 (Exhibit P. 24) and No. 532 (Exhibit P. 5) for Rs. 17-3-0 and Rs. 30-3-0 respectively, and he has been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment, including three months' solitary confinement, on each count, the sentences to run concurrently.

The petitioner has denied throughout that the bills in question were prepared by him but the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have acted, relying on the evidence of B. Ganesh Dass, (P. W. No. 1) Head Clerk of the District Carriage Superintendent's Office, Lahore, Hira Singh (P. W. No. 9), Assistant Establishment Clerk in the same office, and Mr. Hardless, junior, an expert in handwriting, that the whole of Exhibit P. 5 and a portion of Exhibit P. 24. which is encircled by a red line, are in the petitioner's handwriting; and he has accordingly been convicted of the above mentioned offences in the alternative in respect of each document. I have carefully gone through the evidence of above-mentioned three witnesses, who are relied on by the prosecution, and I must say that, in my opinion, their evidence is not sufficient to establish the petitioner's offence beyond reasonable doubt. B. Ganesh Dass and Hira Singh are supposed to be acquainted with the handwriting of the petitioner and their evidence has been treated as relevant under section 47 of the Evidence Act in order to prove that both the bills, Exhibit P. 5 and Exhibit P. 24, are in his handwriting. As regards B. Ganesh Dass, on referring to his evidence, I find that he does not state any of the facts, which according to the explanation to section 47 aforesaid, would make his opinion as to the petitioner's handwriting relevant. He does not state expressly that he has seen the petitioner write or that he has received documents purporting to be written by the petitioner in answer to documents written by himself or under his authority addressed to the petitioner, or that in the ordinary course of business documents purporting to be written by the petitioner have been habitually submitted to him. His evidence is not, therefore, of much value. Apart from this, it is noteworthy that whereas this witness says that Exhibit P. 6, which was also the subject-matter of this prosecution, bears the initials of the petitioner, the Magistrate has held this is not proved and has acquitted the petitioner in respect of that Exhibit. The evidence of B. Ganesh Dass does not, therefore, carry much weight.

Hira Singh (P. W. No. 9), no doubt, tries to support the prosecution, but his statement is not very positive, though from what he says as to having constantly seen the petitioner write, his evidence is relevant under section 47 of the Evidence Act. For instance, he says "Exhibit P. 24 is written like the hand of Jalal Din. I suspect it of being his, also the initials, on P. 5, the handwriting and initials seem to be his, but I am doubtful about the handwriting. (Exhibits P. 22 and P. 23) I think the hand and initials may be his." Evidence of this description is not of much value and is far from sufficient even taken in conjunction with expert evidence for connecting the petitioner.

The expert, Mr. Hardless, gives prima facie strong reasons for his opinion that Exhibit P. 5 and part of Exhibit P. 24 are in the handwriting of the petitioner, but he can express no opinion as to whether the initials on Exhibits P. 24 and P. 6 are or are not in the same hand. The Magistrate and the Sessions Judge admit that it may not b quite safe to convict an accused person on expert evidence as to handwriting, but they say in this case the opinion of the expert is supported by the evidence of two other witnesses which is relevant under section 47 of the Evidence Act. As I have shown above, that evidence is of no value at all, and, therefore, the conviction must stand or fall according as the evidence of the expert, as corroborated by other evidence, is considered sufficient or otherwise for proving the guilt of the petitioner.

In Calcutta case, Panchu Mondal v. Emperor (1), it was laid down by a Division Bench that the evidence of an expert as to identity of thumb marks should be approached with considerable care and caution, especially where much depends upon such evidence. That ruling would apply with equal force to a case of this kind. In another case, Srikant v. Emperor (2), the Allahabad High Court held that to base a conviction upon the opinion of an expert in handwriting is, as a general rule, very unsafe. In that case, the expert whose opinion was not considered sufficient for conviction was one Hardless, very probably the same gentleman, who has been examined in this case, and I am unable to hold in this case that his opinion ought to be considered as sufficient for petitioner's conviction. The following passage, which occurs in the judgment of the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court, is significant:—

"As regards the evidence of the expert, the learned Counsel put before us, with great labour and pains and remarkable ingenuity, twenty-five different points of similarity, which he claimed could be found in Exhibit A., Exhibits B., E., Exhibit W. 3, and Exhibit 4, and all of which he pressed upon us as points to be found in the handwriting admitted to be that of the accused. His argument was that the concurrence of so many points of similarity between the Exhibits abovementioned and the handwriting of the accused had a cumulative force, which made any other inference than this impossible. * * * * * * We gave full attention to what the witness Hardless considered a very strong piece of evidence, viz., that the writing on the forgery was what he called

(2) 2 A. L. J. 444; 2 Cr. L. J. 353.

"a heavy hand' and the writing in the 'O' series was a light hand." (This is a series of documents, which is admitted to be in the handwriting of Gopal Dass).

"This is too uncertain to act upon. It may well be that some person, whose handwriting was ordinarily light, would carefully suppress that evidence of identity when he came to forge a document. * * * The real difficulty in this case is that the prosecution, although they made every attempt to establish that the writing of the forged Exhibits is * * * like that of Srikant, have made no real attempt to show that Srikant is the only man in the bank who could have written the forged Exhibits. Having regard to our experience, which is that persons of similar education and employment and also employed together have a strong tendency to assimilate their handwritings, we feel that this is a serious lacuna in the case for the prosecution and that we have no alternative but to allow this appeal."

The reasoning employed in the above passage applies with equal force to the present case, and I hold that the evidence of the expert is insufficient for the conviction of the petitioner.

I, accordingly, accept the revision and, setting aside the conviction and sentence of the petitioner, acquit him.

Revision allowed.

PO HLAING—APPLICANT

versus

BA E—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—False complaint made to Police—Subsequent inquiry and discharge of accused by a Magistrate.

Though, as a rule, no sanction is required to prosecute for making a false charge to the Police, yet where, after the rejection of a complaint by the Police as false, the complainant complains to a Magistrate, who, after full inquiry, discharges the accused, the latter cannot prosecute the complainant merely for the false charge made to the Police but must obtain the Magistrate's sanction before prosecuting.

Puti Ram Ruidas v. Muhammad Kasem, 3 C. W. N. 33, distinguished.

Petition for revision of the order of the First Class Head-quarters Magistrate, Maubin, who considered it unnecessary that sanction should be obtained for the prosecution of the applicant for an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Kyaw Din, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dawson, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Maung Po Hlaing of Ledaunggan, Pegu District, complained to the Maubin Police that he found a pony he had lost in the possession of Maung Ba E, a Pleader of Maubin and the Police accordingly took cognizance of an offence of theft against Ba E. It was then ascertained that Ba E had bought the pony openly from another man who called himself Po Hlaing. The District Superintendent of Police rejected the case as false and the District Magistrate agreed in this opinion.

Before the Police investigation at Maubin was finished, the complainant, Po Hlaing, had left Maubin and on 14th July 1910, preferred the complaint of receiving stolen property, an offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code, against Ba E in the Dabein Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court. Ba E was summoned to Dabein but the Sub-Divisional Magistrate discharged him believing his statement that he bought the pony publicly. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate expressed no opinion as to Po Hlaing's bona fides in preferring the complaint.

Meanwhile, on 17th September 1912, Ba E had filed a complaint against Po Hlaing under sections 211 and 384, Indian Penal Code, in the Maubin Head-quarters Magistrate's Court. Evidence was recorded and Po Hlaing was eventually charged under section 211, Indian Penal Code. It was not till after the charge was framed that objection was taken to the trying Magistrate's proceedings on the ground that the prosecution required the sanction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Dabein, under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. The Head-quarters Magistrate, Maubin, held that such sanction was unnecessary because (1) the prosecution of Ba E at Dabein ended before the prosecution of Po Hlaing at Maubin began and (2) because the District Superintendent of Police and the District Magistrate, Maubin, concurred in ordering the prosecution of Po Hlaing under section 211, Indian Penal Code. The first is no reason at all and the second is not a good one.

It is idle to contend that the prosecution of Po Hlaing under section 211, Indian Penal Code, was merely in respect of a false charge made to the Maubin Police. The Dabein Magistrate took cognizance after the Police investigation at Maubin.

The offence complained of had, therefore, become "an offence in relation to a proceeding in Court" and section 195 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure applied to it. The fact that Po Hlaing had previously made a similar complaint to the Police of another District is immaterial.

I put the following case to the learned Counsel for the respondent. A woman X, lays a charge of rape against A. at the Police station. The Police after investigation reject the charge as false and order it to be struck off. Subsequently, X. complains to the Magistrate who after full inquiry discharges the accused. If A. could then prosecute X. without first obtaining the Magistrate's sanction, the provisions of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, would be rendered nugatory to a great extent. It is clear, I think, that A. would have to obtain the Magistrate's sanction and could not prosecute X. merely for the false charge he had brought to the police. The present case is not essentially distinguishable from the hypothetical case which I have supposed.

It would, no doubt, have been different if the prosecution under section 211 had already commenced before Po Hlaing complained to the Dabein Magistrate. The Dabein proceedings would not in that case affect the power of the Maubin Magistrate to finish trying the offence of which he had already taken cognizance. This is clear from the ruling in Puti Ram Ruidas v. Muhammad Kasem (1), cited by the learned Counsel for the respondent. But that ruling is no authority for the view that sanction is unnecessary when the prosecution under section 211 is instituted after the Magisterial proceedings (as in the present case).

I think that the sanction of the Dabein Sub-Divisional Magistrate or of the District Magistrate, Pegu, was necessary for Po Hlaing's prosecution under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

But, seeing that the objection was not raised till a very late stage of prosecution, I think that Ba E should now be given an opportunity of obtaining the requisite sanction.

I direct the prosecution of Po Hlaing shall be stayed for six weeks or until such earlier date as the requisite sanction may be obtained by the respondent, Ba E, from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Dabein, or the District Magistrate, Pegu. If sanction is obtained, the trial of Po Hlaing should proceed from the point where it left off, the previous proceedings holding good.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 130 OF 1912.

Saiyid FAIYAZ ALI—APPLICANT

versus

Saiyid EWAZ ALI—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145—Jurisdiction.

There is nothing either in section 107 or in section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which would warrant the conclusions that proceedings taken under the former section, would preclude a Magistrate from proceeding under the latter.

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, of Muzaffarnagar.

Mr. R. Alston (with him Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji), for the Applicant.

Mr. W. Wallach (with him Mr. Ishaq Khan), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Ewaz Ali and his son, Faiyaz Ali, have been quarrelling for sometime. Proceedings were started under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and both parties were bound down to keep the peace. That order was passed on February 14th, 1912. Afterwards an order was passed under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, prohibiting Ewaz Ali from collecting rents of the property in dispute. Faiyaz Ali also instituted a civil suit in respect of the property in dispute, for a declaration that he is in possession of the property and that he is entitled to it. The Police, however, reported that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed, concerning the property in question. On this, the Magistrate, on the 17th of February 1901, declared Ewaz Ali to be in possession of it until he was evicted in due course of law and prohibited all disturbance of such possession until such eviction. Faiyaz Ali comes in revision to this Court and the main point taken is, that inasmuch as Faiyaz Ali was bound down to keep the peace under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed under section 145 of that Code. I am not concerned with the merits of the case, with the fact that the proceedings taken under section 145 were proper or improper, I am only concerned with the question of jurisdiction, and I do not find anything either in section 107 or in section 145 to come to the conclusion that the proceedings taken under the former of the two sections, preclude a Magistrate from proceeding under the latter. I, therefore, reject the application.

Application rejected.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Contempt of Court—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 228—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 480 to 484.

A coarse expression used by a litigant but not addressed to the Court can scarcely be treated as an intentional insult to the Court or an interruption of its proceedings, under section 228, Indian Penal Code, even if the expression was actually overheard by the presiding officer.

Litigants are bound to conduct themselves in an orderly manner, but too much notice should not be taken of a sudden lapse, during a moment of excitement, into language which is unfortunately too common among the lower class of rustics and is not meant to be taken seriously. Where a litigant is detained and adopts a submissive attitude when brought before the Court later after the excitement has worn off, a due admonition or a petty fine at the most is sufficient for preservation of order.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Montgomery, dated 27th October 1911, confirming that of the Magistrate, 2nd class, at Depalpur, District Montgomery, dated 9th October 1911, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision in respect of the petitioner's conviction and sentence of Rs. 50 fine for contempt of Court. It may be taken that the petitioner used a highly improper expression within the precincts of the Court, but for the reasons given by my learned colleague when directing notice to issue, the case appears to be one in which discharge of the offender with a warning would have sufficiently met the requirements of sections 480—484, Criminal Procedure Code.

The coarse expression used by the petitioner was not addressed to the Court but to his adversary, and can hardly be treated as an intentional insult to the Court or interruption of the proceedings, even if it was actually overheard by the presiding officer, which appears doubtful.

Litigants are bound to conduct themselves in an orderly manner, but too much notice should not be taken of the sudden lapse, during a moment of excitement, into language which is unfortunately too common among the lower class of rustics and is not meant to be taken seriously. The petitioner was detained and adopted a submissive attitude when brought before the Court later after the excitement had worn off, and due admonition was sufficient for the preservation of order. At the most, a petty fine would have meant the necessities of the case.

The revision is allowed. Petitioner's fine of Rs. 50 is set aside and will be refunded if paid.

Revision allowed.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 52 OF 1912.
April 26, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Hartnoll.
SUBRAMONIAN CHETTY—APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Police Act (V of 1861), ss. 25, 26—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 87, 88—Priority of claim—Seizure of absconder's property by Government—Attachment of property under Civil Court decree before attachment and proclamation by Government.

The Police seized certain property belonging to two absconding accused under section 25 of the Police Act. The property, however, was not declared to be at the disposal of Government under section 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code until 19th February 1912. Prior to that, i.e., on 5th October 1911, the applicant sought to attach the said property in execution of his decree against the said accused. The Magistrate of the District refused to hand over the property in obedience to the order of the attachment of the Civil Court:

Held, that, as the Government had established no right to the property on 5th October 1911, and as the applicant had at the time established a right to have the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors (the absconders) in it sold by the Civil Court, the order of the District Magistrate refusing to hand over the property to the Civil Court for disposal was wrong.

ORDER.—From the papers before me, it appears that the house of one Tin Ngan was searched on August 29, 1911, and a large quantity of opium found. In connection with the finding of this opium, Tin Ngan and one Sit Hpaw absconded and certain property, said to belong to them, was seized by the Police. On September 2, 1911, V. M. R. P. Subormonian Chetty instituted a suit in the Sub-Divisional Court, Bassein, against Thon Bon and Chim to recover Rs. 1,000 due on a promissory-note. These persons seem to be the same as Tin Ngan and Sit Hpaw. Subramonian obtained his decree on September 27. On September 2nd, he applied for an attachment before judgment on ThonBon's and Chim's property saying that the Police had taken chargeof this property as ownerless property and might confiscate the same as ownerless property. An ad interim attachment was ordered to issue. The attachment referred to certain moveable property. On the back of the attachment order, the District Magistrate noted:—"This property is at present in the custody of the Police in a criminal case. It may have to be confiscated to Goverment later on. The house is not to be opened on any account. If the Chetty has any claims, they may be considered when the Government claims have all been fully satisfied." Subsequently, an order of attachment was issued on the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police on September 9th, under Order XXI, rule 52 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the back of this order of attachment is a note by the District Magistrate to the District Superintendent of Police as follows:—"None of this property is to be touched until the Government claim is first satisfied." On October 4th, Subramonian Chetty applied for proclamation and sale of the attached property. The Sub-Divisional Judge refused to take action until the matter had been settled by the District Magistrate or between the District Magistrate and Subramonian. The latter laid an appeal against this order before the Divisional Court. This appeal is still pending. On November 23rd, Subramonian filed an application before the Sessions Judge setting forth the facts and asking that the District Magistrate be asked not to obstruct the process of the Sub-Divisional Judge's Court and to act in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. On September 25th, proceedings were taken before the second Additional Magistrate, Bassein, to record evidence under section 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to take action under sections 87 and 88 of the same Code. No action was taken under sections 87 and 88 until December 4, when proclamation and warrants of attachment were ordered to be issued. The warrants of attachment were not returned until January 8th, when it was stated that the properties had been seized by the Police, and were in their custody and that the bailiff had a list of them. Sufficient time was not allowed in the first proclamation, and so a fresh one was ordered to issue on January 16. It was, on February 19th, declared to have been duly published on January 17th, and on that date, the properties attached were declared to be at the disposal of Government. The learned Sessions Judge has reported the matter for the orders of this Court. Notice was issued, on Subramonian and the District Magistrate, of the day fixed for hearing the matter. Subramonian appeared by Counsel, but the District Magistrate entered no appearance.

I should also add that on October 5th, Subramonian made an application to the District Magistrate setting out the facts and inter alia mentioning the attachment by the Sub-Divisional Court and saying as follows:—"That petitioner was informed by the Sub-Divisional Judge that your honour objected to the attachment and sale of the goods and, therefore, refused to proclaim the said attached goods to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by petitioner against the said Thon Bon and Chim. Your honour knows that no offence was committed by the said absconders with reference to the said goods, and the Police only took charge of them and reported the matter to you because the owners were absent." The relief asked was that the District Magistrate might be good enough to withdraw his objection and obstruction to the attachment and sale of the goods, or that if he still claims, on behalf of Government, to have interest in the property superior to that of the applicant, he would agree to the sale of the goods pending the decision by a proper tribunal as to the respective rights of Government and applicant to the money. The order passed by the District Magistrate was that he could not accede to the request as the claims of Government must be safeguarded.

The first point seems to be whether the Court can interfere in revision on the Criminal side as it has been asked to do. The application of October 5th before the District Magistrate and the order passed thereon seem to me to constitute a proceeding within the meaning of sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and I am of opinion, therefore, that the Court can interfere in revision. The seizure of the property of the absconders would appear to come under the provisions of section 25 of the Police Act. It has already been detained by the orders of the District Magistrate, though no proclamation has been issued under section 26. At the time of the attachment and application for sale, no action had been taken under the provisions of sections 87 and 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and so no rights had accrued to Government under the provisions of section 88 (7). On the other hand, Subramonian had, when he applied for sale of the goods, established a right to have the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtors, or the absconders, in them sold by the Civil Court. I think that this is such a claim as is contemplated by section 26 of the Police Act. As Government had established no right to them on October 5th, I think that the order passed by the District Magistrate on that date is incorrect. It may be argued that subsequent to that date, that is, February 19, Government has established its right to them, which establishment should be allowed to override Subramonian's claim. But, in my opinion, to allow this would be unfair and inequitable, for, if the goods had been sold in October by process of the Civil Court and the proceeds drawn out by Subramonian, there would have been nothing in December to attach under section 88. As Government had no right to the goods on October 5th, and as on that date Subramonian had established a certain right over them, I am of opinion that the order of the District Magistrate then passed was wrong, and that the order to be passed now should be the order that should have been passed then. I accordingly set aside the order of the District Magistrate of October 5th, and direct that, on the application of the Sub-Divisional Court, he do hand over the goods attached by that Court to that Court for disposal.

Order set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION NO. 685 OF 1911.

March 14, 1912.

NGA SAN MYIN—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 360, 476—Order under section 476, when to be made—Deposition of witnesses how to be read and corrected—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 80—Statement not read over and corrected, whether admissible.

An order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, should be made at, or soon after, the conclusion of the judicial proceedings referred to in the section.

It is the duty of a Judge or Magistrate to read or to have read over to witnesses their recorded depositions with a view to correct any errors which may require correction not only in his own presence and hearing but also in the presence of the accused and of his Pleader, so that the latter may have an opportunity of checking their correctness

A statement not read over and corrected as aforesaid is not taken in accordance with law and, therefore, is not admissible in evidence against the person making it.

Mr. San Wa, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. M. Lutter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant was a witness for the defence in a Criminal Regular Case before the District Magistrate. He was examined on the 29th August 1911 and the District Magistrate pronounced judgment in the case on the same day On the 18th of September following, the District Magistrate made an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the applicant to be arrested and sent before a Subordinate Magistrate on a charge of giving false evidence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. Those proceedings are now stayed pending the result of this application.

It is contended that the Magistrate's order under section 476 was bad and ought to be set aside for two reasons; first, because it was made twenty days after the conclusion of the case in which the alleged false evidence was given, and secondly, because the applicant's deposition was not read over to him in the presence of the accused or his Advocate, or even in the presence of the Magistrate as required by section 360, Criminal Procedure Code, and was, therefore, inadmissible as evidence of the alleged false statement.

The subject of interference by the High Court in revision with an order passed under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and the circumstances, under which such interference is proper, were explained in Nga Paw U v. King-Emperor (1).

On the first point raised by the applicant, there has been some conflict of opinion. It is sufficient to refer to the Full Bench case of Begu Singh v. Emperor (2), where it was held that an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, should be made at, or soon after, the conclusion of the judicial proceeding referred to in the section. I do not think it necessary to go further into the question here, because I find that on the 1st of September, the District Magistrate ordered some "preliminary inquiry" to be made by the Police with a view to proceedings under section 476, and the order in question was made after the receipt of the Police report. Although I do not think that section 476 contemplates a Police investigation, it cannot be said, in the foregoing circumstances, that the Magistrate only thought of proceeding against applicant under the section after 20 days.

On the second point, the application is supported by an affidavit to the effect that the deposition was read over to the applicant by the Bench Clerk in the verandah of the Court House and not in the presence of the Magistrate or the accused or his Advocate And the Government Prosecutor, who has been heard in support of the order, admits that, according to information received from the Magistrate, the affidavit is correct adding, however, that applicant and the Clerk were in view of the accused and his Advocate. He further admits that what section 360, Criminal Procedure Code, evidently requires is that the deposition should be read over in the hearing of the accused or his Advocate.

The practice followed in recording the applicant's deposition, has been the subject of several High Court decisions, e.g., Kamachinathan Chetty v. King Emperor (3); Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (4); Jyotish Chandra Mukerji v. Emperor (5). In all these cases, it meets with condemnation. Manifestly, it is a gross infraction of the plain provisions of section 360, Criminal Procedure Code. It is the business of the Judge or Magistrate in Burma to record the statement of the witness, and it is, therefore, his business to correct any errors which may require correction. He cannot do this efficiently unless the deposition is read over in his presence and hearing. The section further requires that this shall be done in presence of the accused or his Pleader obviously with the view that the accused or his Pleader may have the opportunity of checking the correctness of the deposition. The reading over of the deposition is as important as the recording of it, and it is not permissible to hand over the business to a Clerk to carry out in a verandah or elsewhere while the Judge or Magistrate proceeds to examine another witness or do something else. Even if the verandah or other place were within hearing, the attention of the presiding officer and the accused and the Advocate would be enagaged on the business then before the Court, and they would not be in a position to notice what was read over or what corrections were made.

There is a further special reason why the practice in question cannot be allowed, namely, that section 91 of the Evidence Act, makes the record of a witness's statement the only evidence of that statement, and under section 80 of the same Act, it is admissible only if it was taken in accordance with law. It is from this point of view that the illegality of the practice arises in the present case.

In directing the applicant's prosecution on the basis of a deposition recorded in the manner described, the District Magistrate clearly exercised an improper discretion.

The order passed under section 476 is set aside.

LALAN MALLIK AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—APPELLANTS
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Approver—Evidence—Corroboration—Confession to private person—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 133.

On the night of the 6th-7th of December, a large gang of dacoits made an attack on the house of B. Before they could effect their purpose, the neighbours came up and the dacoits were driven off. One of them, L., was, however, captured. He made a confession on the spot to a private person giving the names of some of the dacoits. As a result of the confession, some dacoits were captured. J. was captured on February 18 and he afterwards turned informer. L. had made a long detailed confession giving an account of the dacoity to a first class Magistrate on December 9, but subsequently on April 20, he retracted the confession:

Held, that, in all cases depending on the evidence of an informer, the degree of support that the evidence required must depend on the amount of the credit in each particular case to be attached to the informer, that the confession of L. was ample evidence to corroborate the approver, and that the convictions of the dacoits were legal.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge of Faridpur, dated 19th June 1911.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Caspersz, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HARINGTON, J.—In this case, the nine appellants have been convicted under sections 395 and 396 of the Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to ten years' transportation each. The Assessors agreed that Lallan and Sajani were guilty, but, while acquitting the remaining seven prisoners, they expressed the opinion that the deposition of the approver was true, but were doubtful as to whether he had given the names of the dacoits correctly. They also expressed an opinion that Lallan was caught red-handed, and that the confession which he made on the spot was made to a private person and was not obtained by force.

The learned Vakil, who appears for the appellants, has taken us at very great length through the evidence of upwards of fifty witnesses who were heard in the course of the case. His object in doing so is not clear because it is conceded by the learned Vakil that it has been established, without any shadow of doubt, that the occurrence took place, and that the only question is whether the evidence of the approver has been sufficiently corroborated to make it safe to uphold the conviction.

The facts that were accepted by the Judge and the Assessors are that, on the night of the 6th-7th of December last year, a large gang of dacoits made an attack on Bistoo's house at Mirgi. Bistoo and another man were sleeping in a varandah. They were assaulted and the dacoits endeavoured with an axe to break into the house. Before they could effect their purpose, the neighbours came up and there was a fight and the dacoits were driven off; but they were not driven off until they had used a gun which was carried by one of them. Bistoo and several other persons received gun-shot wounds, a man named Mahadeo being so severely injured that he died of the effects a short time afterwards. One of the dacoits, a man named Lallan, fell into a hole near the bank of a khal as he was running away and was captured by one Ahmed and two other persons and brought back to Bistoo's godown. There he gave the names of certain other members of the party of the dacoits. While he was doing this, a chowkidar was sent away to lay the first information. As a result of the information received from Lallan, efforts were made to arrest the persons whose names he had given; but, they were not to be found in their villages. Not till the 16th of December, was Biswanath arrested, then on the 18th, Gour Charan was brought by his father and Ganga Charan was caught, on the 29th Pocha Mandal was captured, on January 3rd Sajani, on January 25th, Reajuddi, on February 7th Bepin, on February 18th, Jagadish, who afterwards turned informer, and, in the early part of March, the last prisoner Nabadwip was taken into custody.

A great deal of the evidence which was read dealt with the events that took place when the attack was made in Bistoo's house, but no single one of the dacoits was identified during the attack because they had taken the precaution of arranging their pugris so as to conceal their faces and it was on the capture of Lallan that it was possible to ascertain the names. With regard to Lallan, it should be noticed that he appears to have disclosed no defence at all until April 20th, 1911, when before a first class Magistrate, he stated that he went to a fair and that he was seized by persons he did not know on his way back. He had already made to that same gentleman, on December 9th, 1910, a long detailed confession giving an account of the dacoity. I entirely disbelieve the story about his return from the mela. If there was any truth in it, it would have been stated at once, and Lallan would not have taken time from December to April to think out the story. I have no doubt it was an invention concocted as soon as he regretted having made the confession which he did as to his proceedings in the dacoity. This confession is ample evidence to corroborate the approver and his conviction must be affirmed.

Another of the appellants, Sajani, has made a confession which has been accepted by the Assessors and it is ample evidence to corroborate Jagadish's evidence against him. The law as to an accomplice's evidence is clearly and explicitly laid down in section 133 of the Evidence Act, which provides that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person and that a conviction shall not be illegal merely because the evidence of the accomplice is uncorroborated. In the present case, therefore, to justify the appellants in asking us to set aside the conviction, they must show not only that there is no corroboration but that the Judge, taking all the evidence together, was wrong in acting on it. Now, the informer Jagadish was arrested on the 18th of February. He made his statement on the 20th. It is a very long and detailed statement and is one which it is extremely unlikely that he would be able to invent. When Jagadish went into the witness box, he narrated his story in a way which commended itself to those who heard him giving the evidence. He gave the names of no fewer than 19 persons, some Hindus and some Muhammadans. They were inhabitants of different villages and although Reajuddi, Pocha Mandal and Bepin suggest that there was enmity between themselves and Jagadish, there appears to be no evidence to support the suggestion nor does there appear to be any reason whatever for Jagadish's desiring to implicate any one of the particular persons whose names he had given. He described how the eight people, amongst whom were Sajani and Lallan, assembled in his bari and how they went on to Budhai Mandal's gulli, where 11 other persons were waiting, amongst whom were the other seven out of the nine appellants. He described their progress to Mirgi, mentioned their sitting down at a place for smoking and cutting a bamboo from a bamboo hedge, and the fact that they passed persons on the road with whom words were exchanged, and gave details of the attack on the house and his movements after the failure of the attack in detail, which bears on its face the impress of a true story. He said that he got a warning from Mofizuddin after the dacoity that Lallan had been captured and that he had given the names. Lallan's statement as to the persons, who took part in the dacoity, made in the godown gives the names of all the appellants excepting Pocha Namasudra and Ganga Charan,—but the former's name is given in his statement made to the Magistrate. It has been argued by learned Vakil for the appellants that Lallan did not give the names when he was brought back to Bistoo's godown, but that his statement is the result of a later consultation between the Police officers. The only ground on which the suggestion is founded is that there is a discrepancy between the daffadar and the the chowkidar as to the event of the evening. The chowkidar says that he was sent away to lay the first information while the witness Buzlur was writing down the information as to the names of the dacoits which he was obtaining from Lallan. The daffadar says that when he arrived, he saw Lallan in custody of the chowkidar in Bistoo's godown, and that he [at that time heard that a statement of Lallan's had been written down. Now, would that discrepancy justify the inference that the alleged statement by Lallan is a concoction? It is quite possible that the daffadar may have made a mistake as to the presence of the chowkidar when he arrived, but that the names were given directly after the dacoity by the captured dacoit is, I think, clear from the fact that when the chowkidar laid the first information, he mentioned the fact that the captured dacoit had given the names of those who had come to commit the dacoity. Now, this chowkidar clearly started very shortly after the occurrence, and it is quite impossible to suppose that at that time there was a conspiracy between the Inspectors, who had not yet arrived on the scene of the occurrence, to make out a false list and say that Lallan had given it; and, moreover, though Lallan denied, on April 20th, that he had made any statement to Buzlur Munshi, yet he had made on January 9th to a Magistrate a confession implicating, with one exception, the same people whose names he is said to have given to Buzlur. To my mind, the theory that the names might have been concocted by the Inspectors and made up afterwards entirely breaks down because from the first information which was laid long before the Inspectors came, it appears that Lallan did mention who the dacoits were. It has been contended that his statement is inadmissible on the ground that he was in the custody of the Police when it was made: but I do not think that was the case. He had been captured by private persons and was in their charge in Bistoo's godown. I am inclined to think the argument for the Crown that the chowkidar was not allowed to know what names were given, so that there should be no ground for saying Lallan was in his custody when he made his statemant, is well founded. We have, therefore, the circumstance that directly after the occurrence, the names of the dacoits were given by a man who was engaged with the party, and that those names and the statement made by Lallan with respect to the occurrence agree with the evidence subsequently given by the informer. Sajani's statement, also made on the 5th of January, while implicating himself, gives not only the names given by Lallan but those of Pocha Mandal and Ganga Charan as well; though there is authority for saying that confessions subsequently withdrawn are not evidence against any one except the persons who made them, yet they can be taken into consideration by the Court under section 30 of the Evidence Act; and it is impossible to disregard the fact that, immediately after the occurrence, the names of all the appellants except Ganga Charan were given, and a story was told which agrees with the evidence of the accomplice. Then of the two confessions made before the Magistrate, that of Lallan implicates all the appellants except Ganga Charan, and that of Sajani all the appellants, and there is no evidence of any circumstance which would induce both Sajani and the informer to falsely accuse Ganga Charan. Besides these circumstances, there is evidence that 5 out of the 19 persons named, namely, the appellants Lallan, Reajuddi and Sajani with two other persons who are not before the Court, were seen together by Subdar Hossain just before the dacoity; and another witness, Kadem Sikdar, also saw 7 out of the 19, whose names have been given, sitting close together just before dark on the day of the dacoity and out of these seven, Reajuddi, Bepin, Lalan and Sajani are amongst the appellants on the record. No reason was alleged at first as to why either Lallan or Jagadish or Sajani should give the names of these particular individuals, for there was no evidence that there was any quarrel or ill-feeling between them. It is only late in the proceedings that there is a suggestion that they are named because of an ill-feeling against the Namasudras. There is a striking circumstance that Jagadish says that he got a letter from Mozuffudin stating that Lallan had been captured, and he had given the names of the dacoits. It was, therefore, known to one member of the gang at least that the names of the dacoits had been given. It is to be observed that it is not stated that the name of this or that particular person was given by Lallan, but merely that he gave the names of the persons who took part in the dacoity, and then there is a very significant fact that all the persons whose names were given at once disappeared from their houses. I think myself that all these circumstances sufficiently support the evidence which Jagadish has given. In all cases depending on the evidence of an informer, the degree of support that the evidence requires must depend on the amount of credit in each particular case to be attached to the informer. I have pointed out circumstances in this case which lead me to think that the story that the informer is telling is a true one and that view is strengthened by the impression that was obviously made on the assessors by the informer when he told his story. Then, on the case generally, there has been no attempt to strengthen it by exaggeration or by procuring the false witnesses. It would have been quite easy, I have no doubt, to get persons to come and give evidence as to seeing the members of the gang together or it might have been possible to adduce false evidence of identification in the village at the time of the attack and to improperly strengthen the case by methods which are not unknown in this country. There seems to me in this case to have been a studious avoidance of anything which savours of bolstering up the case. I have no doubt that the evidence given is perfectly true, and that the appellants before the Court were a dangerous body of robbers.

With respect to the sentences, although the attack on the house failed and the dacoits were unable to appropriate any property, yet, nevertheless, the offence is a very serious one because fire-arms were carried by one, at least, of the robbers, and those fire-arms there was no hesitation in using. Several persons have been wounded, more or less seriously, and one man has been murdered. Under these circumstances, I am quite unable to say that the Judge exercised his discretion wrongly in passing the sentences he did. The result is that the appeal is dismissed, and the convictions and sentences are affirmed.

BRETT, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 214—Illegal gratification—Offer of money to forest subordinate for not proceeding with a compoundable offence—Burma Forest Act (Burma Act IV of 1902), s. 62.

A. had a license under the Burma Forest Act for one saw-pit but worked two saw-pits. B., a forester, discovered this breach of the rules and told A. that he would be prosecuted. Whereupon A. offered him Rs. 5 not to proceed with the case.

The offence of working more saw-pits than were covered by the license was compoundable under the Forest Act:

Held, (1) that the offer of Rs. 5 to B. did not amount to an offence under section 214 of the Penal Code;

(2) that the fact that B. was not authorized to compound the offence, did not make any difference.

JUDGMENT.—The accused had a license under the Burma Forest Act for one saw-pit but worked two saw-pits. A forester discovered this breach of the Forest Rules and told the accused that he would be prosecuted for it. The accused thereupon offered Rs. 5 to the forester as consideration for not proceeding further with the case. For this, the accussd has been fined Rs. 50 under the Indian Penal Code section 214 (last paragraph) by the 2nd Class Township Magistrate, Hlaingbwe.

The Township Magistrate and the District Magistrate (who examined the case in revision) overlooked the explanation to section 214 and the provisions of section 62, Burma Forest Act. The forest offence committed by the accused was compoundable under the latter section, and the offering of the sum of Rs. 5 was, therefore, not an offence under section 214 of the Indian Penal Code.

EMPEROR v. GANGA.

It is true that the subordinate to whom the offer was made was not empowered to compound the offence. But that makes no difference. Instead of instituting a prosecution, he should have returned the money and informed the accused as to what forest officers are empowered to compound forest offences.

No one appears in support of the conviction, though the District Magistrate was asked to give notice to the Conservator of Forests in order that the Government Advocate might be instructed to appear in support of the conviction and sentence, if that course was considered necessary.

The conviction and sentence are set aside. The fine will be refnnded.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal revision by the Local Government against an order of the Sessions Judge of Mirzapur.

Mr. A. E. Ryves (Government Advocate) for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The attention of the Court has been called by the learned Government Advocate to the case of King-Emperor v. Ganga, charged with an offence under section 392, read with section 75 of the Indian Penal Code.

The offence is said to have been committed on the 18th of March 1910. Two men have already been convicted as having been concerned in the offence. Ganga was said at the time to have absconded and the case proceeded without his appearance in Court.

So far as I can learn from the papers which have accompanied the record, he was arrested within the Bengal Presidency as being a person without any ostensible means of livelihold. He found his way to prison at Mymensingh. From this prison he was sent for, it does not appear by what authority, and produced before the Joint Magistrate of Mirzapur. The Joint Magistrate inquired into the case falling under section 392 of the Indian Penal Code. The inquiry began on the 6th of November 1911, and ended in the committal to the Court of Session for trial on the 4th of December 1911.

The Sessions Judge of Mirzapur, holding that the Joint Magistrate had no jurisdiction to inquire into the case, and that his Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, directed that Ganga be returned to the custody of the District Magistrate and treated for the purpose of this charge as a prisoner of the Benares State in custody in British territory. It is with this order that the learned Government Advocate asks this Court to interfere.

The attention of the learned Judge was directed to the case of Mahabir v. Emperor (1), also to the case of Emperor v. Naresh Singh (2) and lastly, to the case of Emperor v. Lachmi (3).

In all these cases, this Court held that the British Court had jurisdiction to try the several cases concerned. The learned Judge, however, considered that those cases could be distinguished from the present on the ground that the cases above cited related to persons who had been committed to the Court of Session before the 1st of April 1911, the date on which certain parganas of the District of Mirzapur were constituted a State and granted to the Raja of Benares. He doubts their force as precedents in the present case when the accused was not arrested until the 8th of October 1911, and the case was not instituted against him until the same date. Section 177 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898 enacts that every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdictin it was committed. The sections which follow, 178-189, do not take the present case out of section 177. At the time when the offence was committed by Ganga, it was an offence committed "within the local limits" of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District of Mirzapur; and, as a necessary result upon the arrest, the case would, in the ordinary course, have been committed to the Court of Sessions as Mirzapur. It matters little to what place the offender betakes himself after he has committed the crime. To take an ordinary instance, an accused commits an offence within the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate of Mirzapur, he absconds, remains in hiding for a year or more, passes through several districts in the course of his flight and is eventually arrested for that offence within the district, say, of the 24-Pergunnahs. Upon his arrest, he is, as a matter of course, upon proper request made, transferred to the Court of Mirzapur, his case investigated there, and if it is committed to the Court of Session that Court proceeds to try and pronounce judgment in the case. No question can arise as to jurisdiction.

In the present case, the offence was an offence against British Indian law committed by Ganga at a time when he was a British Indian subject at a place which, at the time when the crime was committed, was within the local jurisdiction of the Mirzapur Courts. It has never been said that Ganga has at any time since he committed the crime ceased to be a British Indian subject. So far as the record goes, he has apparently since the crime resided in British territory up to the time he was produced before the Courts of Mirzapur. The mere accident that from the 1st of April 1911, the spot where he committed the crime has ceased to be British territory, appears to me quite irrelevant.

Wheaton in his Elements of International Law says:—The judicial power of every Independent State extends to the punishment of all offences against the Municipal laws of the State by whomsoever committed within the territory, also to the punishment of all such offences by its subjects wheresoever committed (Edition 1866, p. 179). To the same effect is Phillimore's International Law, 3rd Edition, Vol. I, p. 216. According to Mr. Mayne in his Criminal Law, 3rd Edition page 956, "the jurisdiction of the Mofussil Courts depends upon the offence having been committed within their local limits." See Hursee Mahapatro v. Dinobundo (4).

To hold otherwise would lead, it seems to me, to endless complications and might result in very serious miscarriages of justice.

So far as the present case is concerned, the jurisdiction of the Mirzapur Courts, which may be said to have commenced with the commission of the offence, has neither been suspended nor unbroken.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Mirzapur, and direct him to try at an early date the prisoner Ganga, who has been committed to him for the offence for which he was committed.

Order set aside.

MI CHIT—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 182, 211—False charge of theft made to Police—Complaint against informant under sections 182 and 211, Indian Penal Code —No sanction necessary for proceeding under section 211, Indian Penal Code—Duty of Magistrate--Same facts constituting offences under more than one section—Proceeding to be with respect to the more serious offence.

Where a given set of facts constitutes an offence under more than one section of the Indian Penal Code, proceedings should be taken with respect to the more serious offence.

The offence of making a false charge of theft in an information laid at a Police station falls not only under section 182 but also under section 211, Indian Penal Code, and as sanction is not necessary in order to proceed against the informant under the latter section, a Magistrate should proceed under that section when the complaint is under both sections, viz., under sections 182 and 211, Indian Penal Code.

A person who makes a false charge on more than one occasion is responsible for his act on each occasion.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is admitted before me that respondent, Mi Chit, on the 24th June last, laid information at the Police station, charging applicant, Mi Ngwe, with theft of her jewellery. On the 30th July, the Police reported that the information was false.

On the 3rd August, the applicant made a complaint to the Senior Magistrate, praying that process might issue against respondent on charges under sections 182 and 211, Indian Penal Code, with respect to the information. The Senior Magistrate transferred this complaint to the Additional Magistrate for disposal.

On the 10th August, respondent made a complaint to the Senior Magistrate identical with her previous information to the Police. The Senior Magistrate transferred this complaint also to the Additional Magistrate for disposal. The Additional Magistrate postponed proceedings on the applicant's complaint and inquired into the respondent's complaint. In the end, on the 25th September, he discharged the applicant and classified the case as false, and reported that as he had come to this conclusion, he thought it unfair to the respondent that he should inquire into the applicant's complaint.

The District Magistrate held that either a complaint from the Police Authorities or their sanction was necessary to a prosecution under section 182, Indian Penal Code, and, therefore, the Magistrate could not proceed unless the applicant applied for and obtained the necessary sanction. The Additional Magistrate thereupon discharged the respondent.

Applicant comes here in revision on the ground that no sanction was required to a prosecution under section 211, Indian Penal Code, with respect to the information which respondent laid at the Police station on the 24th June. It is only necessary to read section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to see that this objection must be sustained. But there have been several rulings to this effect of which the following may be mentioned:—Government of Bengal v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry, (1) Puti Ram Ruidas v. Mahomed Kasem (2) and Empress v. Jugat Chander Mozumdar (3).

Intentionally making a false charge of theft against some one in an information laid at a Police station, no doubt, comes within section 182, but it does more. It also comes within section 211 and is, therefore, a very much more serious case than the cases given in the illustrations to section 182, in which the information does not amount to an offence under section 211. The ordinary rule is that where a given set of facts constitutes an offence under more than one section of the Indian Penal Code, proceedings should be with respect to the more serious offence.

Hence, in the present case, it was for the Additional Magistrate, on receiving applicant's complaint, to proceed on the more serious charge, that is, on the charge falling under section 211, and, as no sanction was necessary to such proceedings, the respondent was improperly discharged.

The learned Advocate for the respondent before me has attempted to argue that as the respondent repeated her information in her complaint to the Magistrate of the 10th August, the alleged false charge should be considered to have been one made to a Magistrate and, therefore, to require sanction under section 195 (1) (b). But I am of opinion that this contention is not sustainable. A man may make a false charge on more than one occasion, and, if he does so, he is responsible for what he did on each occasion.

Under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, I direct that the District Magistrate by himself, or by some Subordinate Magistrate, make further inquiry into the complaint of the applicant on which the respondent was discharged.

The Additional Magistrate's report of the 25th September was a proper one to make, and the District Magistrate should not direct the Additional Magistrate to make the further inquiry now ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—False charge made to the Police at a Police station—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211.

No judicial sanction is required in order to prosecute a person for laying a false charge at a Police station. There is no necessity in such a case to hold a preliminary Magisterial inquiry.

Mr. Higinbotham, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Sheikh Ahmed laid information at a Police station charging one Kader Gunny with theft of a goat. The Police after inquiry classed the case as false and submitted it to the District Magistrate for sanction to prosecute under section 211. The District Magistrate wrote on the report "Sanctioned." This sanction is bad in law as it does not comply with the provisions of section 195 (4). Again notice, though not legally essential, is generally proper. The petitioner only asks that that sanction should be revoked.

So far as the prosecution for laying a false information to the Police is concerned, no sanction is necessary and there is no sufficient ground for interfering with those proceedings at all. Moreover, the setting aside of the sanction granted by the District Magistrate would not affect the proceedings now pending.

The District Magistrate's sanction is dated the 9th August 1911. On the 15th June 1911 petitioner filed a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. This was dismissed on the 17th June after complainant was examined and the Police papers read.

There is a considerable body of authority that before an order to prosecute for a false charge is made, the person, who made the original charge, should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it. The facts in Queen-Empress v. Sham Lall (1) and in Jogendra Nath Mookerjee v. King Emperor (2) are very similar to those of the present case. See also Emperor v. Tula (3) and the cases cited therein. I do not think there is any justification for a hard and fast rule such as these authorities lay down. There are cases no doubt when Magistrates granting sanction should be guided by the principle underlying these decisions but this should not, I venture to think, be the invariable rule.

I agree with the opinions expressed by the learned Judges in Jogendra Nath Mookerjee's case (2). There is no authority of this Court on the point.

In view of this body of the authority, I refer to a Full Bench the following question:—

Is it legally essential that a person, who has laid an information to the Police, which, after inquiry, is held to be false and who has then filed a complaint before the Magistrate, which is also dismissed under section 203 as false, be given an opportunity of proving his complaint to the Magistrate by producing evidence, before he can be prosecuted under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of his information to the Police?

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—The following reference has been made by Mr. Justice Robinson sitting as a Court of Criminal Revision.

"Is it legally essential that a person, who has laid an information to the Police, which, after inquiry, is held to be false and who has then filed a complaint before the Magistrate, which is also dismissed under section 203 as false, be given an opportunity of proving his complaint to the Magistrate by producing evidence, before he can be prosecuted under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of his information to the Police?"

Sheikh Ahmed made a charge of theft at the Police station against Kader Gunny. The Police investigated the charge with the result that the case was not sent up for trial and was classified as false by the Magistrate having jurisdiction (as required by the Local Government's Police Department Circular No. 15 of 1908). Meanwhile, Sheikh Ahmed had petitioned the Sub-Divisional Magistrate representing that the Police were not dealing properly with his information and that he was afraid the Sub-Inspector "might spoil the case" and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had thereupon examined the Police papers and, treating the petition to him as a complaint of an offence, had dismissed it under section 203 of the Code of the Criminal Procedure on 17th June 1911. It seems doubtful whether Sheikh Ahmed intended his petition to be treated as a complaint. It mentions no accused and does not ask for process to issue. He probably desired only that the Magistrate should interfere in the conduct of the Police investigation. Subsequently on the 9th August, the District Superintendent of Police applied to the District Magistrate to sanction the prosecution of the informant, Sheikh Ahmed, under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, for bringing a false charge of theft and the District Magistrate wrote the word "sanctioned" on the application. No sanction is necessary for a prosecution under section 211 in respect of a false charge made to the Police. The District Magistrate's order sanctioning the prosecution had no judicial effect.

Sheikh Ahmed applied to the Sessions Judge to revoke the sanction under section 195 (6) of the Code of the Criminal Procedure. The learned Sessions Judge remarked that the District Magistrate's order was not a sanction under section 195 and that no sanction is necessary when the alleged false charge has been made to the Police. But in view of certain rulings of Indian High Courts, he was doubtful whether "in a case of this kind", the complainant is entitled to have Magisterial inquiry held into his complaint before he can be prosecuted under section 211. He, therefore, referred the question to the Chief Court for orders under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Mr. Justice Robinson then made the reference now under consideration.

In the Indian cases which have been cited, the alleged offence under section 211 was committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court. Section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, therefore, rendered sanction necessary in those cases and the Courts were at liberty to consider the question whether a Magisterial inquiry into the truth of the charge is a necessary preliminary to such sanction.

But in the present case, the prosecution is for laying a false charge at a Police station and as no judicial sanction is required for such a prosecution, the question stated in the order of reference does not properly arise. It is clear that no preliminary Magisterial inquiry is necessary as a preliminary to a prosecution for a false charge to the Police.

The learned Sessions Judge expressed the opinion that the subsequent complaint to the Magistrate made no difference, and did not refer for orders the question whether a prosecution for a false charge to the Police will lie when the false charge has afterwards been repeated in a complaint to a Magistrate. This question is not raised in the order of reference and we are not called upon to decide it.

The papers may be returned to Mr. Justice Robinson with a copy of this order.

HARTNOLL, J.—In my opinion, an answer to the reference is not necessary to the decision of the case and consequently one cannot be given. The facts have been set out by my learned colleague, Mr. Justice Twomey. If sanction is necessary under section 195 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, none exists as such can only be given by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate or the Court to which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is subordinate which, under section 195 (7), is the Sessions Court since the Sub-Divisional Magistrate possesses first class powers and so the proceedings would be bad on that account.

If, on the other hand, such sanction is not necessary, the question equally does not arise.

FOX, C. J.—I also think that the question referred does not really arise in the case and that, consequently, it should not be answered.

There has been a ruling of this Court viz., Maung Po Hlaing v. Maung Ba E (4), which bears on some of the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge.

Where a District Board had a certain private channel entered on its books and had spent some money on its up-keep:

Held, that, this was not sufficient to bring the channel under the control and administration of the District Board, and that the persons erecting weirs and fishing in it, with the permission of the owners, committed no offence against the District Board's bye-laws.

Babus D. L. Kastgir and Probodh Kumar Das, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued on the District Magistrate of Noakhali to show cause why the conviction of the petitioners for having obstructed a channel should not be set aside on the ground that there is nothing to show that the channel in question is in the control and under the administration of the District Board.

No one appears to show cause; but the District Magistrate has submitted a statement by the trying Magistrate in which it is pointed out that there is on the record the evidence of the Overseer to the effect that the District Board has the channel on its books and has spent some money on its up-keep. We doubt whether that is sufficient to bring the channel, which is admittedly the private property of the petitioners-landlords, under the control and administration of the District Board for the purposes of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act of 1885.

Under section 76 of that Act, a District Board may agree with the person in whom the property in any channel is vested to take over the property therein, and after such agreement may declare, by notice in writing put up therein or near thereto, that such channel has been transferred to the District Board. Thereupon the property in the channel becomes vested in the District Board and it has in future to be repaired and maintained out of the District Fund. In this way only, so far as we can see, can a private channel be brought under the control and administration of a District Board under the Act.

Now, there is nothing on the record before us to show that there has been any such arrangement between the owners of this channel and the District Board, and it seems to us that, in these circumstances, it is scarcely possible to maintain that the petitioners have by erecting weirs and fishing in the channel with the permission of the owners committed an offence against the District Board bye-laws.

The Rule must, therefore, be made absolute and the fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

S. MUTTU SERVAI—RESPONDENT.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859)—Jurisdiction after the expiration of term of contract or completion of work—Preamble—Object of the Act to punish workmen who receive advances and then break their contracts to work.

GURUDEEN TAILY v. MUTTU SERVAI.

In a case under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, where either the work has been completed or the term of the contract has expired, a Magistrate has jurisdiction to entertain a complaint under section 1 and to order re-payment of the advance under section 2 of that Act.

In re Anusoori Sanyasi, 28 M. 37; 2 Cr. L. J. 149, dissented from.

One object of the Act may have been to provide against workmen a speedy remedy for employers who have made advances on account of work; but the main object was, as the preamble shows, to provide for the punishment of workmen who have taken advances and have fraudulently broken their contracts to work.

The impossibility of a master being able to exercise the option of demanding an order from a Magistrate ordering a workman to perform the work, does not affect his right to ask for an order for the re-payment of the advance and subsequently for an order for the workman's punishment by imprisonment if he fails to comply with the order.

Mr. Halker, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. B. Banurji, for the Respondent.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

On 4th October 1911, complaint was made that Gurudeen Tely had, on 5th October 1908, received an advance of Rs. 200 on a contract signed by him to work as a mill cooly and bring fifty other coolies to work for complainant from 1st January to 31st December 1909; that he absconded and neither worked nor supplied coolies, and that complainant was unaware of his whereabouts till shortly before the complaint was laid.

Respondent admitted signing the contract and also admitted its terms, save that he said he received only Rs. 150 and undertook to supply only twenty coolies; but he alleged that he worked for three months and thereby cleared off the amount of his advance.

The Magistrate found for the complainant on the facts and ordered the respondent to return Rs. 200 to the complainant within seven days.

Respondent applies for revision of this order on the grounds (1) that he is only a contractor and the Act is not applicable to him, and (2) that as the term of the contract had expired and the work had been performed before the complaint was made, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction under the Act.

The first ground is untenable. Even if respondent were merely a supervisor of other coolies, he might still be a workman or labourer within the meaning of the Act, see Maung Tun v. Fazil Kadre (1). But the contract clearly stipulates, and the respondent himself admitted, that he was to work with his own hands.

In support of the second ground, the case In re Anusoori Sanyasi (2) is quoted. It was there held that section 2 of the Act only applies when the work is uncompleted when the complaint is made. If the work has been completed when the complaint is made, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction. In the course of the various judgments delivered, the following remarks occur:—

"An employer by doing the work himself or employing a third party to do it loses his right to proceed under the section."

* * * * *

"The plain object of the Act is to provide a speedy remedy when the work is not done."

"The section pre-supposes that at the time the defaulter is brought before the Magistrate, the complainant has an option either to demand back the advance, or to get an order to have the work completed. But if the work has been already completed, complainant cannot ask for an order to have it completed. He has, therefore, no option, and the condition pre-supposed by section 2 does not exist and the remedy by the Act cannot be applied."

I find that this ruling has not always been followed. Thus, in Queen Empress v. Juno (3), the report of which is not available but which is quoted at page 10 of Jagtiani's Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1905 edition, where a Magistrate refused to entertain a complaint on the sole ground that the complainant had got the work done through other agency before filing the complaint, it was held that it is only where the employer has allowed the workmen, with whom he originally contracted, to complete the work, even after the time agreed upon has expired, that no prosecution will lie against them under Act XIII of 1859.

In Narsing Prosad Singh v. King-Emperor (4), of the two learned Judges composing the Bench, one held that "the remedies under section 2, Act XIII of 1859, are interlocked and interdependent, and if one has lapsed, the other has lapsed also," the other held a different view, and, in the course of his judgment, says as follows:—

"I cannot see why the expiration of the term of the contract should deprive the complainant of his right to exercise his option of asking for the recovery of the money he advanced. The option between the two remedies is that of the complainant and not that of the person complained against and the fact that one remedy would be infructuous, does not seem to me to deprive him of the other. I consider that the complainant's right to recover the money he has advanced continues till it is re-paid to him, subject to the effect of the Limitation Act of which there is no question here." He expressly dissented from the ruling in Khoda Buksh v. Motilal Johori (5) that the term of the contract having expired, the contract cannot be specifically enforced and the money recovered under the Act before a Magistrate, but the Bench being divided in opinion, that ruling was followed. It has also been dissented from by this Court in V. N. Ramasawmi Pillai v. A. Amanadar (6), where the complaint was made, though the respondent did not appear before the Magistrate before the term of the contract expired. To this extent, therefore, the Madras ruling is inapplicable to this Province. In the present case, however, the complaint was not made till long after the term of the contract had expired, and if the Madras and the earlier Calcutta cases be followed, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. Those rulings are based upon the principle quoted above that "the remedies under section 2 are interlocked, and if one has lapsed, the other has lapsed also," and this appears to have been inferred from the fact that section 2 gives the complainant an option between two remedies. It is argued that the Act applies only so long as this option is capable of being exercised: inasmuch as section 2, where alone the option is mentioned, refers to a stage of the proceedings when the workman has already been brought before the Magistrate, the logical conclusion is that unless at the time the defaulter is brought before the Magistrate the option still exists, the remedy by the Act cannot be applied. This Court has already decided against this sweeping conclusion where the complaint has been made, but the respondent has not appeared, before the expiry of the term of the contract. I am doubtful whether in other cases, too, it is sound. Supposing that the contract is for repairs to a house, and that before the defaulter can be brought before the Magistrate, the house is burnt down: I find nothing in the Act to indicate that this deprives the unfortunate employer of the benefit of a summary order under section 2 to re-pay the advance. Nor can I see that where the work is of an urgent nature, such as, e.g., repairs to a roof in the rainy season, the employer, if he wishes to proceed under the Act, is bound to leave the repairs undone until he can trace and produce before the Magistrate a rogue who has swindled him; nor that if he gets the repairs done by somebody else, he thereby deprives himself of the right of laying a complaint under the Act and asking for an order for re-payment of his advance.

Reading section 2 as a whole and together with the rest of the Act, I think the words "at the option of the complainant" in section 2 are inserted for the purpose of making it incumbent on the Magistrate in cases, where it is possible to order either a refund of the advance or performance of the work, to comply with the wish of the complainant in the matter. But for these words, the matter would rest with the Magistrate's discretion; their insertion merely takes away that discretion. I doubt whether their insertion was intended to imply that in cases where, for any reason, it is not feasible to order the completion of the work, the complainant loses his right to proceed under the section to obtain an order for the re payment of the advance.

The objects of the Act are clear from the preamble, namely, to prevent loss and inconvenience sustained by employers from fraudulent breaches of contract on the part of workmen who have received advances; to supplement, by a summary remedy, the employers' wholly insufficient remedy by suit for damages, and to punish persons guilty of such breach of contract. To place on section 2 the narrow construction contended for, would, I consider, largely defeat these objects and render the Act in many cases nugatory for the purpose of protecting and assisting those persons whom it was intended to protect and assist.

As, however, there is in applicant's favour a decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, under section 11 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, VI of 1900, I refer for the decision of a Bench or of a Full Bench, as the Chief Judge may direct, the question:—

"In a case where either the work has been completed or the term of the contract has expired, has a Magistrate jurisdiction to entertain a complaint under section 1, and to order re-payment of the advance under section 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act?"

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

Fox, C. J.—In my opinion, the answer to the question referred should be in the affirmative. With due respect to the opinions of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in the case of Anusoori Sanyasi, In re (2), quoted in the reference order, it appears to me that they have read into the Act a provision which is certainly not expressed in it, and which does not appear by necessary implication to be involved in anything expressed.

One object of the Act may have been to provide a speedy remedy for employers against workmen who have taken advances from them on account of work, but the main object was, as the preamble shows, to provide for the punishment of workmen who have taken advances and have fraudulently broken their contracts to work.

The impossibility of the master being able to exercise the option of demanding an order from the Magistrate ordering the workman to perform the work, does not appear to me to affect his right to ask for an order for the workman's punishment by imprisonment if he fails to comply with the order.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Decree of Civil Court not inter partes—Possession under such decree—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to declare opposite party's possession.

Where the first party was put in possession of disputed property under a decree of a Civil Court, which was not one against the second party: Held, that a Magistrate had jurisdiction, in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to declare the possession of the second party.

Rule against the order of the Assistant Magistrate of Chandpur, dated May 14th, 1912.

FACTS.—This was a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Both parties filed written statements. The second party stated that the land in dispute was given to them by a Civil Court decree in 1910 and the first party obtained an ex parte decree for the same just before the institution of these proceedings against a third party, and when the peon was giving possession to the 1st party and a few huts were being erected, the second party protested and no further acts of possession took place. These facts were admitted by both sides.

The learned Assistant Magistrate after stating the facts proceeded as follows in his judgment:—

"The question seems rather difficult to decide. The effect of decrees against third parties has been the subject of conflicting decision." [Gordon Sims v. Johurry Lal (1); Kristo Alhadini Dasi v. Radha Syam Panday (2); Bloomfield v. Gangadhar Kundu (3).]

"On considerations of equity, I think the second party, who were in possession from 1910 till the institution of these proceedings, who were not even aware of the ex parte decree dispossessing them, not being made a party to those proceedings, should be maintained in possession till a proper decree has been obtained against them.

"I accordingly make an order in their favour."

The first party moved the High Court against this order and obtained this Rule.

Babu Kritanta Kumar Bose, for the Petitioners.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose and Bipin Chandra Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a Rule was issued on the opposite party to show cause why an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, made in their favour should not be set aside on the ground that the petitioners had been put in possession of the property under a decree of a Civil Court.

As, however, the decree in question was not a decree against the opposite party, there is, in our opinion, no ground for interference. The Rule was in fact issued under the misapprehension that the decree of the Civil Court was binding on the opposite party.

The Rule is discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case—Adjournment—Accused—Proper place for.

Though section 526 (8) only makes it obligatory to postpone a case when notification is made to the Court before commencement of the hearing, yet when it appears that a bona fide application for transfer is about to be made, it would usually be well for the Magistrate, at any stage, to grant a reasonable time to enable it to be made.

Dock is the accommodation provided in Courts for persons accused of criminal offences and it is entirely an act of indulgence on the part of a Court to allow an accused person to remain outside it.

Application for transfer of Criminal Trial No. 25 of 1912, in the Court of the 1st Additional Magistrate of Letpadan to a competent Court in Rangoon.

Mr. Banurjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The following is briefly the history of this case. On 9th August 1910, complainant gave accused a promissory note for Rs. 4,000, for which he says the consideration was the agreement, Exhibit A, signed by accused, waiving all further claims against complainant. Accused denies having signed it.

On the 20th November 1911, accused's prosecution was ordered under the Stamp Act for executing this document when insufficiently stamped. The prosecution was stayed provisionally on 5th December, and definitely on 4th January 1912, as accused announced his intention of suing for cancellation of the document. On 16th and 20th December 1911, accused filed suits against complainant in Mandalay and Sagaing, respectively. On 18th January 1912, complainant instituted the present case against accused for cheating in respect of the pro-note for Rs. 4,000. On 26th January, complainant, accused and both their Pleaders were present in the Additional Magistrate's Court, but as the summonses on the witnesses had not returned, it was impossible to proceed, and the case was adjourned till 16th February. On 13th February, complainant sued the accused in Tharrawaddy to establish the validity of the document, Exhibit A. On 15th February, accused swore an affidavit before a Magistrate in Rangoon, and on 16th, his Pleader presented it in the District Magistrate's Court, Tharrawady, with a petition purporting to lie under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, praying for the proceedings before the Additional Magistrate to be stayed. The grounds alleged in the affidavit were that the suits in Upper Burma were fixed for the 27th and 30th of April, and that in Tharrawady for the 4th March, that one of the issues in both the Upper Burma suits, and the sole issue in the other suits was whether accused executed the document Exhibit A, which is also the subject-matter of the criminal case in the Additional Magistrate's Court. On 17th February, the District Magistrate passed order fixing the case for hearing on 29th February and calling for the Magistrate's proceedings but on 29th, the District Magistrate closed the case as the present application for transfer had been filed.

On 16th February, accused presented a petition to the Additional Magistrate asking him to stay proceedings pending the order of the District Magistrate. This was rejected on the ground that no sufficient cause was shown, that there had been delay in moving the District Magistrate, and that the prosecution witnesses were all in attendance, and the complainant objected to a postponement. Nine witnesses and accused were then examined and the case adjourned till the next day. On 17th, accused presented his petitions, one to be allowed to file a copy of the affidavit put in the day before to the District Magistrate's Court, and one for a postponement to enable him to move the Chief Court to transfer the case. The Magistrate rejected and returned them both; the former on the ground that it had no bearing on the case before him and the latter on the ground that it was made too late. Accused was charged and ordered to file a list of witnesses by the 20th, the case being fixed for 27th. On 21st, this application was filed and the next day proceedings ordered to be stayed pending its hearing.

On 22nd, accused filed a list of witnesses, but as there was not time to summon them before 27th, summonses were postponed till after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses. Before 27th, this Court's order staying proceedings was received. The present petition and accompanying affidavit are extremely verbose and contain the following allegations:—

(1) That on accused asking for a postponement on 16th February, the Magistrate got angry, postponed all custody cases that were fixed for hearing on that day and proceeded with the case against accused;

(2) that later on the day when his Pleader appeared and wanted to file the copy of the affidavit presented to the District Magistrate's Court, the Magistrate flew into a passion and ordered accused to be placed in the dock;

(3) that on 17th, he returned both applications instead of filing them;

(4) and that he refused to stay proceedings while he applied for a transfer.

As regards the first point, it appears that there were no custody or other cases at all fixed for 16th February which, at the request of Pleaders on both sides, was reserved for the present case. This ground is false.

As regards the second, it appears that accused's Pleader exhibited some excitement and a tendency to interrupt the proceedings, and had to be called to order. The Magistrate says he and accused became boisterous and, therefore, the latter was placed in the dock. I may remark that the dock is the accommodation provided in Courts for persons accused of criminal offences, and it is entirely an act of indulgence on the part of the Court to allow an accused person to remain outside it. Under the circumstances, accused had no ground of complaint in being placed in the dock, nor any reasonable ground for fearing that he will not receive an impartial trial after being so placed.

As to the third ground, no doubt the Magistrate would have done well to file the petition and copy of affidavit, even if he considered they had no bearing in this case; and as regards the application for adjournment, he certainly ought to have done so. But I fail to see that the return of these petitions to accused could in any way lead him to presume he would not have a fair trial. It is not as if they were torn up and thrown in the waste paper basket. He was in no way bound to adjourn, pending order from the District Magistrate, and he gave good reason for not holding so. I may remark, however, that it is to be regretted that the District Magistrate, when fixing the date for hearing the application, did not stay proceedings pending the hearing. Had he done so, I fancy all this bother would have been saved.

As to the last ground, though it is true that section 526 (8) only makes it obligatory to postpone when notification is made to the Court before the commencement of the hearing, yet when it appears that a bona fide application for a transfer is about to be made, it would usually be well for the Magistrate, at any stage, to grant a reasonable time to enable it to be made. In the present instance, it does not appear that any adjournment was in fact necessary, inasmuch as the application for transfer was filed and the proceedings were stayed before the date originally fixed for the further hearing of the case. Under these circumstances, the Magistrate's refusal to fix a later date cannot have given rise to any reasonable apprehension in accused's mind.

There are other allegations against the Magistrate, as to his losing his temper, threatening to record that accused wished to produce no witnesses and to send him to jail. The whole petition appears, on the face of it, highly exaggerated. It contains at least two false statements of fact, (1) that on the 26th January, the case was postponed as complainant was absent being sick, whereas the record shows he was present and that the absence of witnesses was the reason for postponement, and (2) as to postponing custody cases on 16th February, whereas none were fixed for that date. I entirely disbelieve the other allegations. I consider this application to be the culmination of a systematic attempt to throw obstacles in the way of prosecution and I accordingly dismiss it.

Application dismissed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 299—Verdict of Jury—Sessions case—Right of Jury to return special verdict—Power of Judge to require a verdict of guilty or not guilty.

The Code of Criminal Procedure does not permit the recording of what is known in English law as a 'special verdict', i. e., where the Jury state their findings on the facts themselves, leaving it to the Judge to apply the law to those facts and himself find the prisoner 'guilty' or 'not guilty.'

A Judge is not entitled to ask the Jury the reasons for their verdict. He is not entitled to put questions to them to show that the conclusions at which they arrived were not logical or consistent. Any ambiguity in the Jury's verdict is the only justification for any question by the Judge.

Emperor v. Siranadu, 30 M. 469; 17 M. L. J. 476; 6 Cr. L. J. 373, approved.

Queen-Empress v. Joy Kristo Goswami, 7 W. R. (Cr.) 22, distinguished.

Queen-Empress v. Dadanna, 15 B. 452; Queen-Empress v. Madhavarao, 19 B. 735, not followed.

Where the Jury give their findings only on the facts, leaving it to the Judge to apply the law to those facts, the Judge is empowered to require the Jury to return a verdict of "guilty" or not "guilty."

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of Tinnevelly Division, in Case No. 104 of the Calendar for 1911.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and A. Subbarama Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The accused were charged with house-breaking by night and with dacoity. After the evidence on both sides was taken and the Public Prosecutor had replied, the Judge explained the law to the Jury and summed up the evidence, both of the prosecution and the defence, and he asked the Jury to give the verdict. What then happened may be described in his own words:—"Foreman: We find that the accused were present at the dacoity, but there is no evidence that they shared the common purpose of those engaged in the dacoity or were assisting in it."

"The Court informed the Jury that a verdict of guilty or not guilty of the offence charged must be returned, and added, 'The question for you, gentlemen, is whether you think that they were there in pursuance of the common purpose of those who were engaged in the dacoity and whether you think that they had that purpose in assisting in it.'"

After some consultation in the box by the Jury, the Court said:—"I shall direct you, gentlemen, that, on that finding, your verdict should be 'not guilty'."

"Jury expressed a desire to retire again for consultation and did so. After doing so, the Foremam said that their finding was guilty, as the very presence of the accused in the house at the time was sufficient to justify a finding that they were dacoits though there was no evidence of individual acts."

The Judge accepted the Jury's verdict and convicted the accused of the offences charged. The Judge states further in his judgment that after their first finding and, if they had returned a verdict in accordance with it, he should have felt it his duty to refer the case.

The Pleader for the accused in appeal contends that when the Foreman said that the accused were present at the dacoity, but that there was no evidence of a common purpose, the Judge was bound to have recorded a verdict of not guilty and acquitted the accused. According to the English Law, it is open to the Jury to deliver their opinion on the facts of the case, i.e., a special verdict and to leave it to the Judge to draw the legal interence from the facts found. The Judge is bound to accept their opinion on the facts and record the verdict of not guilty if on the facts found they are not guilty in law. In the case before us, it is clear that, on the facts found by the Jury, the appellants are not guilty of the offences for which they are charged.

But it is contended by the Public Prosecutor that the Criminal Procedure Code recognises no distinction between a "general" verdict and "special" verdict and that the Jury are bound to deliver a verdict of guilty or not guilty. The question is one of difficulty and, after a full consideration of the question, I have finally come to the conclusion that the Public Prosecutor is right.

Under section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code, at the close of the trial, the Judge has to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence and to lay down the law by which the Jury are to be guided. He cannot divide the charge into two. He is not entitled to sum up the evidence, ask them to give their opinion on such evidence and apply the law to the facts found. This is also the English law, according to which, it is the privilege of the Jury to give a special verdict. After the summing up, "it is the duty of the Jury to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which, according to such view, ought, according to the direction of the Judge, to be returned" (section 299 of the Code of Criminal Procedure). It will be noticed that this direction of the Judge, referred to in section 299, must be given when the evidence was summed up; and the verdict has to be returnd according to the direction which is given to the Jury before they had come to a decision upon the facts of the case. This section apparently does not entitle the Jury to decide the facts alone leaving it to the Judge to draw the legal inference therefrom and direct the verdict to be recorded in accordance with that inference.

The illustration to section 299 of the Code of Criminal Procedure supports this view. "When A. is tried for the murder of B., the Judge has to explain to the Jury the distinction between murder and homicide and tell them under what view of the facts, A. ought to be convicted of murder or of culpable homicide, or ought to be acquitted. It is the duty of the Jury to decide which view of the facts is true and to give a verdict in accordance with the direction of the Judge." The section does not contemplate a case of special verdict.

It is true that the section does not lay down that it is not open to the Jury to give a special verdict. But our law of Criminal Procedure is very different from that which is prevalent in England. Where there is nothing to support such an inference in our Procedure Code, I do not think it is open to us to assume the existence of similar power in India.

The case reported as Queen-Empress v. Joy Kisto Gossamy (1) has no application. There the Sessions Judge refused to accept the verdict of the Jury on the first count acquitting the prisoner and required them to find the prisoner guilty on that count. He was obviously wrong.

In Queen-Empress v. Hurry Prosad Gangooly (2), the Jury informed the Judge that they believed the prosecution case that the accused were beaten, but did not believe the aggravating circumstances alleged by the prosecution. The Judge thereupon asked them whether the accused were guilty under section 330 of the Indian Penal Code and they returned an answer in the affirmative. The contention was that the Jury had given a special verdict which was tantamount to a verdict of not guilty in that case and the Judge should have simply recorded it. The High Court held that the Judge did not act illegally. The result of the case, therefore, if it has a bearing on the case before us, is against the appellant's contention. But there is an observation in the judgment in favour of the appellant to this effect :—

"The law does not prescribe any specific form in which the Jury are to return their finding, and we are of opinion that they are at liberty to deliver it in any form which they think fit."

The case of Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana (3) was the converse of the present case. There, after the delivery of the verdict of 'not guilty' by the Jury, the Sessions Judge put various questions to them to elicit their opinion on the various facts which arose in the case. There was a difference of opinion among the High Court Judges as to the legality of this course.

In my opinion, a Judge is not entitled to ask the Jury their reasons for their verdict. He is not entitled to put questions to them to show that the conclusions at which they arrived were not logical or consistent. Though he is entitled under certain circumstances to refer the case to the High Court for decision, he cannot put any questions to the Jury to come to a conclusion upon the case himself. Any ambiguity in the verdict is the only justification for any question by the Judge. It is true that it may be of very great assistance to a Sessions Judge to know the reasons for the verdict of the Jury to make up his own mind whether it is necessary to differ from the Jury or not. But the Jurors would not generally be able to state their reasons very clearly and I, therefore, entirely agree with the decision of this Court on this point in Emperor v. Siranadu (4). In the course of the judgment in the Bombay case [Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana (3)], Mr. Justice Jardine apparently accepts the view that it is open, under the Criminal Procedure Code of India, for the Jury to return a special verdict and so far that case is in favour of the appellant. The other Judges give no opinion on the point. The decision in Queen-Empress v. Madhavarao (5) is directly in point and is in favour of the appellant. In that case, the prisoner was tried for rape. The Jury returned a verdict that the prisoner did the act with consent. The Judge, without desiring them to reconsider their verdict or giving them fresh directions, required them to say whether they found the accused guilty or not guitly. Thereupon the Jury returned verdict of 'guilty.' Jardine, J., to whose opinion I have already referred in Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana(3), sitting with Candy, J., held that the first verdict is "what is called a special verdict" and the Judge is bound to accept it. In none of these cases are the terms of section 299 of the Criminal Procedure Code referred to. No Madras case has been cited by the Pleaders. In England, it may be necessary to recognise the right of the Jury to return a special verdict to minimize the risk of error on their part in applying the law to the facts. The power which the Judges have in India to disagree with the Jury and refer the case to a superior Court does not exist in England. The findings of fact are not always sufficient and clear and the Judges in England have often found it difficult to apply the law to a series of facts found in a special verdict by the Jury. In India it is probable that the findings of fact would seldom be sufficient, and very often they will be wanting in precision and as the Code gives the power to the Judge to differ, it is certainly much more convenient that he should send the matter up to the High Court in a proper case rather than put questions to the Jury with reference to the various facts on which their findings may not be clear. Such examination may seriously interfere with the independence of the Jury. A general verdict of guilty or not guilty simply is less likely to be open to any criticism by such examination. If we recognise this right of the Jury to return a "special verdict", we shall have to recognise the right of the Judge to ask the Jury to reconsider their verdict—see Reg. v. Meany (6)—or to give them fresh directions, Rex. v. Henry (7). In the result, we may lose the benefit of trial by Jury without securing the benefit of trial by Judge. I am, therefore, of opinion that what is called a special verdict, where the Jury state their findings on the facts themselves, leaving it to the Judge to apply the law to those facts, is not allowed by the Criminal Procedure Code.

(1) 7 W. R. 22 Cr.
(2) 14 W. R. 59 Cr.
(3) 15 B. 452.

The procedure followed by the Judge is, therefore, right and, as there is no misdirection, the conviction must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4 (8), 337 (4)—Complaint—Tender of pardon—Recording of reasons for the pardon—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 7, 20, 466—Plaint—Proceeding of a Court of Justice—Alteration of plaint after it has been filed.

In filing a complaint in a Criminal Court, it is not necessary that the complainant should name all the accused persons.

The recording of reasons by the inquiring Magis.

trate is not a condition precedent to the tender of pardon and its acceptance by the approver.

A plaint is a record or a proceeding of the Court of Justice in which it is filed. It is a document which once filed cannot be altered or amended without the special sanction of the Court.

Revision against an order of conviction by the Sessions Judge of Shahjahanpur.

Mr. Ryves, for the Crown.

Messrs. Satya Chandra Mukerji and Gulzari Lal, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, Shama Charan and Jamna Sahai, have been convicted under section 466 and Shama Charan sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500; Jamna Sahai was sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. Ram Lal was also tried at the same time and convicted and sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 3,000. Ram Lal has not appealed but Government has applied in revision for enhancement of sentence in the case of all three. Notice has duly issued to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced and Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji appeared to show cause on behalf of Shama Charan and Ram Lal, while Mr. Gulzari Lal appears to show cause on behalf of Jamna Sahai.

On another charge, all three persons were also convicted but the sentence was limited to one day's simple imprisonment in each case. Jamna Sahai and Shama Charan have appealed from that conviction. We do not think that it was unreasonable not to inflict substantial sentences in the second case because to some extent the matter was one transaction. Second offence was committed at one and the same time.

The offences, with which these several persons were charged in the two cases and some other cases which were instituted at the same time but which have not been proceeded with, were that of altering plaints which had been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur and substituting certain pages in these plaints for pages which formed part of the plaint at the date that the suits were instituted. It was admitted that the plaints as originally drawn up were altered very considerably and it was also admitted that certain pages were, after the plaints had been originally drawn up, subsequently substituted. The prosecution alleged that these things were done after the suits were filed, while the accused alleged that the alterations and substitutions were made and done perfectly innocently before the plaints were filed.

We have considered the evidence and we have had the advantage of hearing the case for the accused most forcibly put by Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, but we have not the least hesitation in saying that we entirely concur with the finding of the learned Sessions Judge and the Assessors that the alterations and substitutions were made after the plaints were filed. In one of the cases, the alteration was no less an alteration than the addition of a party against whom the suit was clearly barred when the alteration was made. There cannot be the least doubt that the alteration and substitutions that were made, were made fraudulently.

In addition to addressing us on the merits, Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji has raised a number of objections to the legality of the conviction. He says, in the first place, that there was no sanction or complaint entitling the Court to take cognizance of the offences, that is to say, that in one case, there was no sanction or complaint against two of the accused and in the other case against one of them. It is true that there was no sanction but there was, in our opinion, a complaint.

It is urged that because Jamna Sahai and Shama Charan were not specifically named in the complaint of Mr. Lyle, District Judge, that there was no complaint. Mr. Lyle in his order does not, it is true, name Jamna Sahai and Shama Charan, while he does name Ram Lal, but, in our opinion, it was not necessary that he should name these persons. "Complaint" is defined in section 4 (8) of the Code of Criminal Procedure as meaning:—"The allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code that some person whether known or unknown has committed an offence." In our opinion, Mr. Lyle's order was a complaint within the meaning of this definition, and he having made this complaint, the Court or Magistrate was entitled to take cognizance of the offence and to proceed against all persons who should appear before him as accused persons in connection with the offence of which Mr. Lyle had made a complaint.

The next point urged on behalf of the accused was that the approver's evidence was not admissible. It appears that the pardon to the approver was tendered by Mr. Lane, a Magistrate of the 1st class. It is urged that Mr. Lane was not inquiring into the offence and that he did not record his reasons as provided by section 337 (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In our opinion, Mr. Lane was inquiring into the offence. The case had been transferred to him for inquiry and he had issued summonses for the attendance of the witnesses and the accused. It is true that in his order, he did not record his reasons but it does not appear from the section that this recording of reasons by the Magistrate is a condition precedent to the tender of the pardon and its acceptance by the approver, and the pardon clearly could not be set aside on this ground. Furthermore, it is perfectly clear that the accused were in no way prejudiced by reason of the fact that Mr. Lane omitted to record his reasons.

It was then argued that the approver's evidence was not admissible because the altering of the plaint in the way already referred to was not an offence under section 466 of the Indian Penal Code, but that it was one under section 465 and that accordingly, it was not an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions, and that, therefore, a pardon could not be given to the approvers. It was argued that a plaint was neither a record nor a proceeding of, or in, a Court of Justice, and reliance was placed on the definition of the words "Court of Justice" in section 20 of the Indian Penal Code. The definition is as follows:—"The words 'Court of Justice' denote a Judge who is empowered by law to act judicially alone, or a body of Judges which is empowered by law to act judicially as a body, when such Judge or body of Judges is acting judicially." Section 7 is as follows:—"Every expression which is explained in any part of this Code is used in every part of this Code in conformity with the explanation." In our opinion, it is impossible to contend that a plaint is not a record or a proceeding of the Court of Justice in which it is filed. It is part and parcel of the record of a suit and we think that it can clearly be said to belong to the particular Court of Justice in which it is filed, notwithstanding the definition of that expression in the Code. It is a document which once filed cannot be altered or amended without the special sanction of the Court.

We think, therefore, that all the objections taken to the admissibility of the approver's evidence fail. We accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 147, 225, 353—Rescue from lawful custody—Arrest on warrant with bail—No intimation that bail was allowed—Arrest, whether legal.

Where a warrant allowing bail is being executed by a constable, it is his bounden duty to state that bail would be taken. If the constable did not give the slightest intimation to the person arrested of the fact that bail had been allowed, the arrest would be illegal. The arrested person's people would be justified by the law of private defence, in rescuing him, by committing a common assault upon the constable.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Magurah, dated June 23, 1911, convicting the petitioners under sections 225B and 353 of the Penal Code and sentencing the petitioner No. 1 to six months' and the rest to one year's rigorous imprisonment each, which was confirmed by the Session Judge of Jessore on July 28, 1911.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Debendra Nath Bagchi, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute on the first three grounds taken together which practically amount to this, that a small bail was entered upon the warrant and that the constable did not give the slightest intimation to the arrested person of the fact that bail had been allowed. On the contrary, he appears to have said that it was no use rescuing the prisoner because the darcga was coming present.

ly. The warrant had been made over by the daroga for execution and it was the constable's bounden duty under the law to at once state that bail would be taken. Before actually making the arrest he should certainly have said, "Can you give the required bail?" We are of opinion that the arrest was illegal.

Now comes the question whether the accused persons were justified by the law of private defence in committing a common assault upon the constable. The medical evidence clearly shows that nothing but simple hurt was caused. The conviction under section 147 must clearly go, inasmuch as the accused was not in lawful custody. For the same reason, the conditions under sections 225 and 353 must go; and having regard to the medical evidence we cannot find that there was any offence committed by exceeding the right of private defence.

The Rule, therefore, must be made absolute and the petitioners discharged from their bail.

Rule made absolute.

Excise Act (V, B. C. of 1909), ss. 46, 56—Master's liability for offence by servant—Removing ganja—Acting on behalf of master, meaning of.

A master is not criminally responsible for the wrongful act of a servant unless he can be shown to have expressly authorized it.

Sutter Ali Khan v. Golam Hyder Khan, 6 W. R. Cr. 60, relied upon.

Under section 56 of the Bengal Excise Act, the prosecution must show that the servant was not only in the employ of his master but also acted on his behalf in committing the offence. The expression "on behalf of" connotes some benefit to the person on whose behalf another person may act.

When a servant does anything within the scope of his employment for that purpose, his action will be binding on his master, and the master will be criminally liable for any wrongful act of the servant.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Arrah, dated April 29th, 1911, convicting the Petitioner under sections 46 and 56 of the Bengal Excise Act V, (B. C.) of 1909 and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

Mr. Caspersz and Babu Surendra Kumar Bose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Uttam Chand, has an extensive business in excise shops of which he holds a considerable number in nine districts of this Province including a ganja shop at Koelwar in the District of Arrah. His Koelwar, servant Lakhi Chand, was convicted, under section 46 of the Bengal Excise Act (V of 1909), for being in possession of two and a-half seers of ganja which he was attempting to export from Arrah District to Bindhyachal. Lakhi Chand confessed his guilt.

The question, now, is whether the conviction of the petitioner, the master of Lakhi Chand, can be supported on the language of section 56 of the Act. The section is as follows:—"When any offence punishable under section 46 is committed by any person in the employ and acting on behalf of holder of a license granted under this Act, such holder shall also be punishable as if he himself had committed the offence unless he establishes that all due and reasonable precautions were exercised by him to prevent the commission of such offence."

In the opinion of the convicting Magistrate, the petitioner had so many servants and so much business to attend to that it was due to laxity of supervision on his part that his servant, Lakhi Chand, was able to leave his Koelwar shop and commence travelling to Bindhyachal with $2\frac{1}{2}$ seers of ganja.

The substantial grounds argued on this Rule are two in number. With regard to the fourth ground specified in the petition, there is no finding in the judgment of the convicting Magistrate, that the $2\frac{1}{2}$ seers of ganja belonged to the petitioner, that is, came from his Koelwar shop. The Magistrate says:—"It is extremely probable that he (Lakhi Chand) took the ganja from the Koelwar excise shop of the accused." That, however, is not a sufficient finding on which to implicate the master of Lakhi Chand. The other ground—the 3rd in the petition—is that Lakhi Chand was acting outside the scope of his employment and was not acting on behalf of the petitioner when he committed the offence under section 46 (a) of the Excise Act.

Section 46 enumerates various offences, and we think that if a master is to be held liable for all the acts of his servants, his liability must extend to all parts of section 46. As we put it to the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, who appeared to show cause, "If his servant Lakhi Chand had cultivated ganja in the garden of his own private residence would the master be liable for that act?" The only possible answer to this question is in the negative.

The language of section 56 is very clear and does not in any way conflict with the general principle alluded to in Suffer Ali Khan v. Golam Hyder Khan (1), namely, that a master is not criminally responsible for the wrongful act of a servant unless he can be shown to have expressly authorised it. That case was one of mischief, but the principle is of extensive authority. Under section 56, the prosecution must show that Lakhi Chand was not only in the employ of the petitioner, but also acted on his behalf in removing the ganja from his shop. Lakhi Chand was presumably committing a criminal offence. His business was to remain at the Koelwar shop, and there to conduct sales for the petitioner; but when he travelled beyond the scope of that business, it is not possible to implicate the petitioner in his acts which were not done for the benefit of the petitioner but rather for Lakhi Chand's private purposes. The expression "on behalf of" connotes some benefit to the persons on whose behalf another person may act.

Various authorities have been cited to us on constructions of the Arms Act, the Opium Act, and the Bengal Motor Car and Cycle Act. We have examined them all but we have not derived such assistance from them as would warrant a detailed discussion. There is one case to which we may allude, namely, Emperor v. Haji Shaik Mahomed Shustri (2), which was cited to us by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer; but it does not carry his arguments any further than the principle we have already mentioned. No doubt, when a servant does anything within the scope of his employment for that purpose, his action will be binding on the master, and the master will be criminally liable for any wrongful act of the servant. In the particular case cited, which was under the Indian Emigration Act (XXI of 1883), the master was deemed to be so liable.

In these circumstances, we think the conviction cannot be supported. It is, therefore, set aside and the Rule made absolute. Any fine, paid or levied, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

Bail-bond—Prisoner committing suicide—Surety—Discharge.

When a person on bail commits suicide, the surety is discharged.

Rule against the order of the Magistrate of Maldah, dated August 19th, 1911, directing that the petitioners should forfeit Rs. 5 each in respect of their bail-bonds by which they had stood sureties for the appearance of one Satya Narain who was released pending the hearing of his appeal by the Sessions Judge of Rajshahi. The Sessions Judge of Rajshahi refused to revise the order on September 19th 1911.

Babu Akhil Bandhu Guha, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule must clearly be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. It is absurd to contend that when a person on bail commits suicide the sureties are liable for default in his appearance. The proposition only needs to be stated to expose its fallacy. The order of the lower Court will be discharged and the money, if paid, will be refunded.

A notice to the Collector under clause (2) of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not necessary to make an abandonment complete and effectual. The notice is important for the purpose of the suit which the tenant is allowed to bring under clause (3), but is not essential to complete the abandonment; and a landlord who has not given such notice is still at liberty to prove that an abandonment has in fact taken place. The question of abandonment or no abandonment is one of intention to be determined upon the facts of the particular case in which the question arises. An appeal was filed in March 1909. The sole appellant died on 4th October 1909, but no application to bring his representatives on the record was made till 27th May 1912. The only explanation of the extraordinary delay was that the appellant's representatives were ignorant of law. The appeal was admitted on 4th June 1910, long after the appellant's death but nothing more was done for over a year owing to omission to pay process-fee till 6th August 1911:

Held, that appeal had abated and that no special circumstances existed to justify any concession to the appellant's representatives.

The right of appeal in a pending action is not a matter of procedure and the repeal of a statute, which was in force at the time when the action was instituted and which regulated the course of appeal, does not affect the right of appeal acquired or enjoyed under that Statute unless the repealing Statute expressly or by necessary implication takes away that right.

The words "any present right of appeal" in section 154 of Act V of 1908, mean a right of appeal in esse and not in passe, i.e., a right of appeal which had actually come into existence and was capable of being exercised by the aggrieved party at the commencement of the new Statute.

Where in a suit instituted before the coming into force of the new Civil Procedure Code, an order of remand is passed after the new Code has come into force, the right of appeal against the order is regulated by the new and not by the old Code. (j)—Sale held under old Code—Decision of lower Appellate Court under new Code—Whether second appeal lies—Revision—Limitation—Erroneous decision on point of limitation, no ground for interference in revision by High Court.*

Under the Civil Procednre Code of 1882, a sale in execution could be impeached for fraud under section 244 thereof, and, therefore, a second appeal lay. But under the present Code of 1908, fraud is put on the same footing as material irregularity by Order XXI, rule 90, and section 104, sub-section (2) read with Order XLIII, clause (j), makes it clear that there is now no second appeal in such a case.

A sale was held in execution under the old Code. The first application to set it aside on the ground of fraud was made and allowed by the first Court under the old Code. The order was set aside on appeal and the case remanded under the old Code. On remand, the application was dismissed by the first Court on June 12, 1909, that is, when the new Code had come into operation. There was an appeal and the original order was once more set aside and the case again remanded. A second appeal was preferred against the remand order:

Held, that this order having been made under the new Code, the appeal was incompetent.

An error in applying the law of limitation is not an error which can be corrected in revision; for it cannot be held that a Court, which has jurisdiction to decide a case, has acted without jurisdiction, or illegally, or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, where it makes a mistake in law through failure to appreciate the whole of the law on the subject. Held, that, in all cases depending on the evidence of an informer, the degree of support that the evidence required must depend on the amount of the credit in each particular case to be attached to the informer, that the confession of L. was ample evidence to corroborate the approver, and that the convictions of the dacoits were legal. A valid award ordinarily operates to merge and extinguish all claims embraced in the submission. After the award has been made, the submission and the award furnish the only basis by which the rights of the parties can be determined, and constitute a bar to any action on the original cause of action.

In order that a person, who was a party to a submission and award, may sue on the original cause of action, he must first have the award set aside, if the award is not a nullity but is only voidable at the instance of the party, and the suit to set aside the award must be brought within the period of three years under Article 91 of the Limitation Act.

Fraud or dishonesty on the part of arbitrator is not sufficient to vitiate his award as a nullity.

When an arbitrator has jurisdiction to make an award, fraud or dishonesty on his part does not deprive him of such jurisdiction; such conduct merely amounts to misconduct and may afford good cause for a competent Court to set aside the award.

Where a party has omitted to take steps to get an award set aside within the prescribed period of limitation, he cannot be allowed to object to the award on the ground of fraud or dishonesty of the arbitrator or his failure to decide all the matters in dispute.

An arbitrator is not bound to determine a matter not notified as a matter in difference or which is merely a collateral question, though it may be necessary to dispose of it with a view to deciding the main dispute.

In order to deprive an award of its binding effect, it is not enough that it was not enforced or that even both parties objected to it, but there must be positive evidence that both parties agreed that the former state of things should be restored. KHANCHAND v. KODUMAL, 5 S. L. R. 224 819 ————Award—Parties to pending suit making reference without intervention of Court—Submission and award invalid—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 21—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 12, 20, 523, 525—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, ss. 17, 20.

During the pendency of a suit in a Court, it is not open to the parties to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, or, after an award has been made by the arbitrator appointed in this way, to apply to the Court that the award be filed.

Such a submission and the award made in pursuance thereof are quite invalid.

The provisions of sections 523 and 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, and sections 17 and 20, Schedule II of the Code of 1908, apply only to cases when there is no suit relating to the same matter already pending between the parties who are affected by the agreement to refer or by the award.

The previously instituted suit is not barred by reason only of an agreement being made between the parties for reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court.

An award made by an arbitrator in pursuance of such an agreement cannot be taken cognizance of by the Court so as to be made the basis of a proceeding under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. DHAN SINGH v. KAHN SINGH, 191 P. W. R. 1912 140

——————Whole muqaddama referred—Power to arbitrator to award money or impose other conditions when asked to divide property--Duty of Court in dealing with award when fairly made.

Where parties apply to the Court to refer their muqaddama to the arbitration of a particular person, the words used in the application should not be interpreted in a narrow sense but should be taken to mean that the parties ask for the settling of all their disputes through arbitration.

Where an arbitrator divides property in a particular manner or in dividing it lays down certain directions or awards certain amounts to one party, his act is well within his jurisdiction and the Court is not competent to interfere with the award on its merits.

Where parties agree to refer their dispute to the decision of an arbitrator, they ought not be allowed to resile from the position which they took up at the time of the reference and objections which are merely technical and not objections of substance should not be allowed to prevail so as to disturb an award, which has been fairly made and which, when the real nature of the dispute between the parties is looked to, might reasonably be considered as directed to a decision on the matters which were in dispute. The definition of "Exciseable liquor" given in the new Excise Act (V, B. C. of 1909), prevents chemists and vendors of drugs selling intoxicating liquors or otherwise dealing with them as medicinal preparations.

Tinctures of Cinchona, Cardamom or Ginger and Spirits of Nitric Ether are not exciseable liquor.

The smuggling of drugs prepared in French territory with French spirits in Bond into British territory can be prevented under the customs law. Therefore, those articles ought to be dealt with by the Customs Authorities; but the omission of these authorities to do so does not render the accused liable to punishment under the Excise Act.

"Juice drawn from any cocoanut" in section 2, clause 20, of the Excise Act, does not refer to the milk of the cocoanut itself but means the juice of the palm tree of whatever species and not its fruit.

The act of taking an order for foreign goods does not constitute an abetment of their transport, though it might be an abetment of their import. EMPEROR v. MOTI LAL CHANDER, 16 C. W. N. 785; 13 CR. L. J. 545 961

A master is not criminally responsible for the wrongful act of a servant unless he can be shown to have expressly authorized it.

Under section 56 of the Bengal Excise Act, the prosecution must show that the servant was not only in the employ of his master but also acted on his behalf in committing the offence. The expression "on behalf of" connotes some benefit to the person on whose behalf another person may act.

When a servant does anything within the scope of his employment for that purpose, his action will be binding on his master, and the master will be criminally liable for any wrongful act of the servant. UTTAM CHAND v. EMPEROR, 16 C. W. N. 551; 15 C. L. J. 401; 39 C. 344; 13 CR. L. J. 591 1007

Bengal Rent Act (X of 1859), s. 109, scope of—Single execution creditor and single judgment-debtor—Case of several judgment-debtors—Execution against some of judgment-debtors—Proceeding against immoveable property of some judgment-debtors whose moveables and persons also were proceeded against, though no proceeding taken against other judgment-debtors—Process against moveables on first execution—Proceedings against immoveable property subsequently, though moveables came into judgment-debtor's possession in the meantime—Sale of immoveable property—Onus of proof—Decree to be self-contained—Execution as decree stands.

Section 109 of the Bengal Rent Act, 1859, contemplates the case of a single execution-creditor and a single judgment-debtor; it does not specifically refer to the case of a joint and several decree against a number of judgment-debtors, in which case the decree-holder is at liberty to take out execution against any or as many of the judgment-debtors as he may choose. And the requirements of the section are satisfied if, in so far as an individual judgment-debtor is concerned, proceedings have been taken against his person or moveable property before an attempt is made to reach his immoveable property; he has no concern with his fellow judgment-debtors against whom the decree-holder may not proceed at all at his choice. In other words, execution can be taken out of a decree for money under the Bengal Rent Act, 1859, not being money due as arrears of rent of a saleable under-tenure, against the immoveable property of some of the judgment-debtors, whose moveable property and person had been proceeded against previously, although the moveables belonging to the other judgment-debtors have not yet been sold.

Process against moveable property must be taken upon the first application for execution of such a decree; and after moveable property has been exhausted, the decree-holder is free to proceed against immoveable property upon succeeding applications for execution, notwithstanding that other moveable property has come into the possession of the judgment-debtor in the meantime.

An application against the person of the judgment-debtor is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an application for execution against immoveable property.

It is not the true meaning of section 109 that if an application has been made for execution against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, it can be defeated by him only if he proves that he has moveable property within the district sufficient for the complete satisfaction of the judgment-debt. The decree-holder is not free to ignore the moveable property, even upon the first application for execution although its value is not sufficient for the full satisfaction of his decree.

A decree must be self-contained and must be executed as it stands.

In a suit it was ordered that a decree be passed in accordance with the solenamah filed by the parties, but the provision in the solenamah, as to the payment of interest in the event of default, was not incorporated in the decree:

Held, that the decree-holder was not entitled to take out execution of interest under the decree as it stood, but he might apply for amendment of the decree. BHIKARI SUKUL v. GADADHAR RAMANUJ DAS 735

The plaintiffs instituted a suit for ejectment against certain occupancy-raiyats under clause (a) of section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A suit for rent was subsequently commenced in respect of a period subsequent to the alleged forfeiture:

Held, that there was no waiver at the date of the commencement of the suit, and the claim for ejectment could not be defeated on that ground.

Before a landlord can succeed in an action under section 25, clause (a), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is obligatory upon him to prove that the land has been used in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy; what has to be considered is the effect of the act upon the entire land comprised in the tenancy.

Therefore, where a holding comprises 66 bighas and the tenants sub-let 4 bighas to an under-lessee who excavated a tank on 2 bighas, and it was found that the tank had not rendered the land of the tenancy unfit for the purposes thereof, but was a practical necessity:

Therefore, in cases in which the land comprised in the holding of the raiyat is of different qualities and there is no indication to show at what rates the various classes of lands were assessed, section 48 cannot be made applicable, if only a part of the land has been sub-let to an under-raiyat. A decree for rent under Rs. 50 in value was made by a Munsif with final jurisdiction under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An appeal was preferred against that decree and heard without jurisdiction.

The decree was modified. In execution of that decree the holding was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor brought into Court a sum for the reversal of the sale under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An application to set aside the sale was refused on the ground that the poundage fee had not been deposited. This order was made by a Munsif who had final jurisdiction under section 153. The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge who overruled an objection to the competency of the appeal. On the hearing of the appeal, it was held that the judgment-debtor was not bound to deposit the poundage fee as under the High Court Rules, the decree-holder, upon reversal of the sale, would be entitled to a refund of the sum he had deposited on that account. The sale was consequently reversed. The decree-holder moved the High Court against that order:

Held, (1) that an order of this description made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is ordinarily appealable.

(2) That an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a rent-decree is an order which decides a question relating to title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto.

(3) That the effect of the explanation newly added to section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not to practically supersede the Full Bench case of Kali Mondul v. Ram Sarbeswar Chakrabutty, 32 C. 957; 9 C. W. N. 721; 1 C. L. J. 476 (F. B.), although the effect of the explanation is to restrict considerably the effect of the Full Bench decision.

(4) That where the question is, whether the judgment-debtor has complied with the requirements of section 174 for reversal of the sale, the case is not covered by the explanation and the rule laid down in the Full Bench governs the matter.

(5) That the appeal to the District Judge was competent.

Obiter dictum:—(1) The judgment-debtor was not bound to deposit the poundage fee.

(2) It was not open to the judgment-debtor to challenge the validity of the decree in execution proceedings after that decree had been executed without objection and the sale had actually taken place. BENI MADHAB ROY v. BISSESSWAR BHARATI 436

Both the lower Courts found that he had colluded with the mortgagors in order to defraud the mortgagee, the plaintiff:

Held, that the auction-purchaser had not acquired a good title free from the plaintiff's incumbrance and section 48 of the Land and Revenue Act was no reply to plaintiff's action. Held, (1) that, notwithstanding the order for partial exemption of the tenure from sale, the decree was to be executed as a decree for rent in respect of the unexempted portion, and the effect of a sale of the unexempted portion was to pass the property to the purchaser free of all encumbrances:

Under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, as well as under the Code of 1908, the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant, or the next friend of a minor plaintiff, must obtain the express sanction of the Court, if he wishes, on behalf of his ward, to refer the matter in dispute or any question involved in the suit to arbitration; and an omission, on the part of such guardian or next friend, to obtain such sanction has the effect of making all proceedings consequent on such reference voidable against all parties other than the minor. In other words, an application of the guardian or next friend under section 506 of the former Code or under Schedule II, para. 1 of the present Code, comes within the purview of section 462 of the former Code or Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code, as the case may be, and unless the leave of the Court is expressly obtained and recorded, the application to refer will have the same effect, and be open to the same objections, as would any other agreement or compromise entered into by such guardian or next friend with reference to the suit without the leave of the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings.

The leave or sanction of the Court must be obtained and must be expressly recorded if the reference to arbitration is to be valid for all purposes and against all parties including the minor, but in a case where such sanction has not been obtained, the reference is not necessarily invalid or void. The minor alone can claim to avoid it.

A reference to arbitration, is an agreement with reference to the suit and as such within the purview of the general provisions of law embodied in section 462 of the former Code and Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code.

Civil Procedure Code—(1882)—concld.

A reference to arbitration, under section 462 of the Code of 1882, or under the first para. of the second Schedule to the present Code, has "reference to the suit," for it is only matters in difference in the suit that can be so referred to arbitration through the Court. Therefore, an application preferred to the Court by the parties, agreeing to make such reference, is an "agreement."

The provisions of section 462 of the Code of 1882 or of Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code are enacted for the protection of minors who are unable to look after their own interests and to whom the Court stands in a quasi-tutelary position. The guardians and next friends of minors are not invariably honest, and even if honest, are sometimes careless and occasionally lacking in intelligence. Therefore, the duty of safeguarding the interests of the minors, so far as is practicable, is thrown upon the Courts.

Quære—Whether the express sanction of the Court is not needed when a guardian or next friend of a minor agrees, on his behalf, to be bound by the oath of the other party to the suit? GANESHA v. MUL CHAND, 159 P. W. R. 1912 161 F. B.

A judgment under the Civil Procedure Code is only the basis of a decree or order. The decree which itself is the formal expression of the judgment, is, and the order may or may not be, appealable, but the judgment itself gives no right of appeal.

The drawing up of a decree is a conscious and formal act, whereby the Court notifies its disposal of matter in controversy in accordance with its adjudication thereupon; and no right of appeal arises until such decree has been drawn up.

In certain cases, the passing of a preliminary decree is imperative but in other cases, it is a matter within the discretion of the Court. But unless a preliminary adjudication is finally expressed by a decree, or followed by an appealable order, no right of appeal can arise.

In a redemption suit brought by sons of a Hindu to redeem a mortgage, which had already been foreclosed by a decree against their father, the mortgagee pleaded, inter alia, that he had no notice of the plaintiffs' interest at the time of bringing his foreclosure suit, that the foreclosure decree was binding on the plaintiffs, and that the father of the plaintiffs was the managing member of his family. The Court framed preliminary issues on the above points and found against the defendant. No formal decree was drawn up:

Held, that the decision of the Court on the preliminary issues was not a preliminary decree, and, therefore, was not appealable.

Obiter.—If a Court, having written a judgment, which should be followed by a decree, fails to draw up such decree, the remedy of the party who wants that decree, whether for appeal or execution, is to apply for it, and, if it is refused, to move the High Court in revision. The Court which passed a decree can order concurrent execution of it simultaneously with execution proceedings initiated by the Court to which it has been sent for execution, but such execution should be allowed only in exceptional circumstances. It is only when such execution is necessary in the interests of the decree-holder, and when it can be carried on without hardship to the judgment-debtor, that it ought to be allowed by the Court which passed the decree.

When a decree is transferred by the Court which passed it to another Court for execution, and an application made to the latter Court is dismissed, a subsequent application for execution made to the Court which passed the decree, while the result of execution has not been certified by the Court to which it was sent for execution, is not an application made to the 'proper Court,' unless there is an order permitting simultaneous execution along with execution proceedings initiated in the Court to which the decree was sent for execution.

The petition was represented without amendment and the District Court simply recorded it. On 21st October 1910, the decree-holder applied to the District Court for execution:

Held, (1) that the application, of 13th October 1907, was a step-in-aid of execution which saved limitation:

On a bond executed by one H. S., a decree was obtained against his widow. On the re-marriage of the widow, the property of H. S. came into the possession of his reversioners. The decree-holder sought execution of his decree by attachment of the property of H. S. in the hands of his reversioners. One of the reversioners made an application stating that H. S. had not raised any loan from the decree-holder, that he had no necessity for doing so, that the decree obtained against the widow was collusive and fraudulent and not binding on the reversioners. On this application, the Court referred the decree-holder, to a regular suit to establish his right to proceed against the property of H. S. in the hands of his reversioners. But, instead of instituting a suit, the decree-holder preferred an appeal to the Divisional Judge who entertained the appeal:

Held, that as the reversioners did not claim under H. S. or his widow and had succeeded to the property on the re-marriage of the widow by virtue of their own rights of collateral succession, they were not representatives of the judgment-debtor under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that as the said section was inapplicable, the Divisional Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against the order of the first Court. ——————— s. 48—Execution of decree—Limitation—Twelve years' period to commence from the date when decree is capable of execution.

Before the execution of a decree can be held barred under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be shown that the decree was in all its parts ripe for execution on the date from which the period of twelve years is to be computed.

The execution and application contemplated by the section relate to a decree which is executable on the date of the decree in respect of the application made and execution sought, and 'the order for execution' contemplated by the provisions of the section refers to an order which the Court could have made and enforced in obedience to the terms of the decree.

A decree was passed on 14th December 1892 and provided, inter alia, that if there should be 'any deficit or any just and legal obstruction of whatever nature' to the mortgaged property being sold, the decree-holder should recover the deficiency or whatever might be due from the judgment-debtor personally and from his other property.

There was default in the payment of the decretal money. A part of the mortgaged property was sold. But as the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to satisfy the full amount of the debt, the decree-holder was about to bring to sale the rest of the mortgaged property when the Collector intervened in 1908, and had the impending sale stopped on the ground that it was vatan property.

On the 19th of December 1910, the decree-holder applied to have the personal remedy enforced against the judgment-debtor:

Held, that the application of 19th December 1910, was not barred under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, as the 12 years' period must be counted from 1908. NARHAR RAGHUNATH NAPHAD v. KRISHNAJI GOVIND NADGAVANDI, 14 BOM. L. R. 381; 36 B. 368 822

Where there is an attachment, and after that attachment a private alienation, and after that private alienation again other creditors obtain decrees and put in claims for rateable distribution, then although those claims are made by persons different from the original attaching creditor and referable to different decrees, nevertheless they are, by the new Code of Civil Procedure, expressly made claims enforceable under the first attachment, provided that the first attachment is carried out and assets are in execution actually realized under that attachment and so made available for distribution rateably. In such circumstances, the main private alienation is void against all the claims of the creditors who have put in petitions for rateable distribution of assets after that private alienation was made.

Where, however, there has been an attachment, and after that a private alienation and after that again petitions for rateable distribution by other creditors, and the first attachment is swept away by reason of the attaching creditor declining to proceed with it, or accepting satisfaction privately, then all the subsequent claims to rateable distribution go with the attachment.

In this case, the subsequent creditors obtain no protection under section 64, Civil Procedure Code, against private alienation, for their claims to rateable distribution are only claims enforceable under the attachment, provided that attachment results in the realisation of assets which the Courts can rateably distribute.

Semble:—Where a creditor has attached the property of a judgment-debtor, who thereafter privately alienates the property, and after that alienation other creditors of the judgment-debtor impose attachments, then subsequent attaching creditors will not be entitled to the protection of section 64, when the prior attachment has fallen through.

A claim by way of second attachment cannot be said to be enforceable under a prior attachment when a condition precedent for enforcing the former is removal of the latter.

Upon a vesting order being made, all the property of an insolvent passes to the Official Assignee and all decrees and other proceedings against the insolvent are ordinarily stayed.

After a vesting order has been made, any subsequent attachment on the property of the insolvent is, for all legal intents and purposes, a nullity in itself, and does not confer any advantage thereby under any of the sections dealing with ordinary execution proceeding under the Code of Civil Procedure.

In 1894, A. obtained a decree against B. and in execution of the decree attached certain property of B. Shortly after B. assigned the whole of his right, title and interest to C. In 1898, D. obtained a decree against B. In 1899, B. took the benefit of the Insolvency Act and his insolvency continued up to the present. In 1904, D. levied an attachment on the property already attached by A. A.'s debt was paid off and his attachment raised in 1907. C. thereupon applied to the Court and got D.'s attachment on the property raised. D. then brought the present suit to have it declared that the property upon which his attachment had been placed was the property of his judgment-debtor and was, therefore, still liable to attachment:

Held, (1) that D's attachment of 1904, while the insolvency was still continuing, was a nullity in itself and of no service to D. under the attachment of A. to be made a ground of claiming the protection of section 64 against the private assignment to C;

Subsequently, A. sued the Secretary of State for a declaration of his ownership of the land:

Held, that A. was bound to give notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code before bringing the suit, and the fact that A. was taking other steps before the Revenue authorities, with reference to the Deputy Collector's order, did not affect the question of notice.

Per Chandavarkar, J.—In order to take the case out of section 80, there must be something in the conduct of the Secretary of State which had brought about a state of things preventing the plaintiff from complying with the provisions of the section in question; that is to say, the evidence must be such as to show that humanly speaking it was impossible for the plaintiff to give a notice and comply with the provisions of the law as laid down in section 80. The mere fact that a decree-holder has associated with himself a stranger would not make a sale valid when the bid is a joint one and the interest of the decree-holder cannot be separated.

The law authorizes a Court to impose any condition it considers fit on the permission granted to a decree-holder to bid at a sale of the property of his judgment-debtor. An order imposing on the decree-holder a condition that his lowest bid should be the amount of the decree, is not ultra vires or illegal, but valid and enforceable.

The conduct of a decree-holder, who evades a condition imposed and colludes with strangers to bid with him in purchasing the property for much less than the decretal sum, amounts clearly to fraud.

The mere fact that the decree-holder agrees to bid for the property for the amount of the decree and purchases it for a sum much less than that amount, is sufficient to show that his fraud has led to substantial loss.

Such a sale is bad and should be set aside. RAJ KUER v. CHUNNOO LAL 888

An order for consolidation of suits can be made in a proper case in the exercise of the inherent power of the Court, now recognized by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908.

When many actions are oppressively and vexatiously brought by the same plaintiff for the purpose of trying the same question, the Court will interfere either by staying the proceedings or granting time to plead in all the actions, but only upon terms, or in some other way.

The Court ought not to consolidate actions commenced by the same plaintiff against different defendants unless the issues to be tried are precisely similar or the parties consent to such consolidation.

A Court consolidated a mortgage suit, a money suit and a partnership suit on the ground that the substantial parties were the same and some of the points raised were common to them and so it would be convenient to try them together, in that the evidence on the common points would be the same in all the suits. It appeared, however, that the substantial questions in controversy were not identical, and it was not likely that the questions in controversy between the parties in the money suit and in the mortgage suit could be covered by the decision in the partnership suit:

Held, that the order for consolidation ought not to have been made, that the Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and that irremediable mischief might be done if the High Court refused to interfere. KALI CHARAN DUTT v. MANODABALA DASI 897

A coarse expression used by a litigant but not addressed to the Court can scarcely be treated as an intentional insult to the Court or an interruption of its proceedings, under section 228, Indian Penal Code, even if the expression was actually overheard by the presiding officer.

Litigants are bound to conduct themselves in an orderly manner, but too much notice should not be taken of a sudden lapse, during a moment of excitement, into language which is unfortunately too common among the lower class of rustics and is not meant to be taken seriously. Where a litigant is detained and adopts a submissive attitude when brought before the Court later after the excitement has worn off, a due admonition or a petty fine at the most is sufficient for preservation of order. ments on a pending case, when the comments can in the least be taken to have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of an accused person.

When during the pendency of a trial, a serious charge made against an accused person is treated by a journalist as a humorous event on which the public are invited to laugh, it is a matter that must be dealt with seriously.

The repetition by a paper of an offensive epithet against an accused person under trial is quite as objectionable as the original assertion of that epithet.

To talk humorously of an accused person's ill-health and to make light of a serious matter is a most objectionable practice on the part of a journalist.

The power of committing a citizen or a journalist to jail or of inflicting a fine on him for contempt of Court, or punishing him in any other way, such as making him pay costs, should be exercised with the greatest caution.

Contempt matters are matters not between parties but are matters between the respondents and the Court and the Court can accept an apology which it considers sufficient. CLARIDGE, In re, 14 BOM. L. R. 231; 13 CR. L. J. 461 93

He asked expressly that commission on these belated collections by the headman should be paid to him and not to the headmen. The petition was granted by the President and the Committee passed a resolution which was intended to have the same effect as the President's order. The petitioner drew a sum of Rs. 111-6-2 as commission on collections made by ward headmen after the expiry of the prescribed period of 45 days. Afterwards, objection was raised that the bailiff should not receive commission on taxes which he did not collect. The petitioner was called upon to refund and on his refusal this suit was instituted, the basis of the suit being that the bailiff was not entitled to the money, and, therefore, should refund it:

Held, (1) that if the money was recoverable at all, it was recoverable under section 72 of the Contract Act, which provided that a person to whom the money was paid by mistake must re-pay it, but that the payment in this case was a voluntary payment made with full knowledge of the facts;

The defendants appealed to the High Court and valued their appeal at Rs. 5,291 and paid Court-fees on their memorandum of appeal ad valorem. During the pendency of this appeal, mesne profits were assessed at Rs. 2,570 and a decree made in favour of the plaintiff for this amount. The defendants desired to appeal against this decree:

Held, that as the defendants had already paid Court-fees upon the claim for mesne profits valued at Rs. 4,199, they could not be called upon to pay Court-fees a second time, and that this appeal would be filed without any Court-fee being paid on the memorandum of appeal. ———— ————Partition suit — Decree in accordance with award—Objections to award not considered—Revision application—Award attacked re mode of partition—Court-fee payable—Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (VI).

In a partition suit, a decree was passed in accordance with an arbitrator's award. A., one of the parties, was directed by that decree to pay a sum of money to the other side in cash. Actual partition of the joint property of the parties was also effected by the decree.

A. filed a petition for revision of the decree. In this petition he sought two reliefs, (a) that he was not liable to pay the sum of money, and (b) that the Court below accepted the award as valid without considering and disposing of his objections to that award, the main allegation being that the arbitrator did not allow A. a reasonable opportunity to put the case before him and that this had resulted in an unfair mode of partition being adopted.

A. paid an ad valorem Court-fee as regards the first relief (a) and a Court-fee of Rs. 10 as regards relief (b).

The right of the other parties to share the joint family property was not disputed; nor did A. urge in revision that any particular piece of property of a definite value should have been allotted on partition to him and not to the other parties:

Held, (1) that the petition for revision was properly stamped;

(2) that it was not possible to estimate relief (b) at a money value and, consequently, in respect thereof, a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 was sufficient. LILA RAM v. MUKAND RAI, 229 P. W. R. 1912 57

There was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against A. It was contended for A. that the whole trial was illegal and void as he was tried at one trial for two distinct offences:

Held, that the case fell under section 235 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, as there was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against A., and the falsification of accounts charged was an offence which formed part of the transaction as to the criminal breach of trust, because the accounts alleged to have been falsified related to the act charged under section 408 of the Penal Code. The accused was prosecuted under section 497 of the Penal Code. The trying Magistrate held that adultery was not proved but he found the accused guilty of insult likely to provoke a breach of peace under section 504 of the Code. On appeal, the Sessions Judge held that no offence under section 504 had been committed but he was of opinion that the charge under section 497 was sustainable. The Sessions Judge, however, held that he had no power to interfere with the acquittal of the accused under section 497:

Held, that the Sessions Judge had power under section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, to interfere in the case.

If he was of opinion that accused had committed adultery, the Sessions Judge could alter the conviction to section 497 of the Penal Code, as the conviction under section 504 and the acquittal under section 497 were based on the same evidence.

If the acquittal on the one charge and the conviction on the other are based on identically the same facts, the Appellate Court has power to change the section and convict the accused of the right offence.

——— , construction of—Declaratory decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Mortgage of Nankar rights—Mortgagee's right to enforce payment against Talukdar.

One B. was the owner of a village in the Nawabi time. He got the village included in a Taluka and was granted in exchange a cash allowance of Rs. 240 per annum as malikana in perpetuity. In 1870 M., the son of B., obtained against the husband of the defendant-respondent, Talukdar, a decree from the Settlement Court by which Rs. 240 per annum was decreed to him as nankar. In 1896 and 1898, M. executed deeds of mortgage in respect of portions of the nankar in favour of the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs-appellants, who obtained a decree for possession on the basis of the mortgage-deed in 1901. The plaintiffs brought the present suit against the defendant Talukdar for recovery of the amount of nankar for six years on the basis of the mortgages. The representative of the mortgagor was not impleaded as defendant in the case.

The relevant part of judgment of the Settlement Court was as follows:—"Ordered that the claim of the plaintiff for the receipt of Rs. 240 per annum against the defendant be decreed. Order communicated to the parties. A note should accordingly be made in the papers. The plaintiff will recover Rs. 240 per annum in execution of the decree:"

Held, (1) that, on a proper construction, it must be held that the decree was merely declaratory and that the suit was not barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The operative part ended with the words "be decreed". What followed appeared to be directions to the office. The decree fixed no date for the payment of the nankar. The mere addition of the direction that the nankar was to be realized on the execution side would not alter its character as a declaratory decree;

(2) that the fact of the defendant-respondent being no party to the deed of mortgage was no bar to the plaintiffs enforcing payment against the defendant. KASHI RAM v. SAHIB-UN-NISSA, 15 O. C. 99 389

A rent-decree was obtained before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force; but the execution sale under the decree took place after the Act had come into operation:

Held, that the rights of the parties have to be determined with reference to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and not to those of the Bengal Rent Act VIII of 1869 B. C.

Therefore, where the zemindar in the execution sale purchased a tenure but did not annul an under-tenure in the manner prescribed by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which procedure it was obligatory on him to follow:

Sanction is required to proceed against a Receiver when he acts for the protection of the estate in his hands.

Therefore, where the alleged act of defamation arises out of a matter of repairs of the estate in the possession of the Receiver and is based upon a letter in which he claims that he is acting on behalf of the estate, a charge of defamation aganist the Receiver is incompetent without the leave of the Court.

A Digwari tenure is similar to a Ghatwali tenure. It was originally granted in consideration of the performance of military service, to which Police duties were attached. The tenure is hereditary and inalienable. The Digwar is appointed by the Government and is liable to dismissal by it for misconduct. On dismissal the next male heir, if fit for the office, is appointed.

Where a zemindar does not part with his mineral rights to the Digwar, it must be presumed that those rights remain in the zemindar.

Dying declaration—Deposition of witnesses who heard it—Written statement by deceased—Incomplete record of deposition—Re-trial—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, 33.

It is of the utmost importance that evidence as to a dying declaration should be as exact and full as possible. Where such a declaration was heard by witnesses who spoke to it but was apparently much fuller than what the record of their depositions showed,—the Sessions Judge not having recorded all they said on the point: Held, that there must be a re-trial.

When what is sought to be proved is the verbal statement of a dying person, the proper and legal mode of proving it is by eliciting from the person who heard the deceased make the statement, what the deceased said. If the statement was taken down in writing by the witness or by some one in presence of the witness, the witness would be entitled to refresh his memory by referring to it; otherwise the writing itself is not relevant unless it is in the nature of a deposition taken in the presence of the accused.

Where the deceased dictated his statement and it was taken down and he signed the writing after being satisfied as to its accuracy, such writing may be regarded as a statement of the deceased in writing and would be admissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act. But even if what was stated was taken down by some one in writing and signed by the deceased, that would not debar a witness who heard the statement from proving it independently of the writing. And, ordinarily, it would be desirable to have on record what the witness is able to reproduce from memory, in addition to the writing. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. BALA NAGI REDDI, 11 M. L. ——— ——— Right of way—Indivisibility—Passage common to two houses—Partition of houses—Presumption of law—Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Mayukha—Easements Act (V of 1882)—Appellate Court bound to decide points raised.

Both according to the Mitakshara and the Mayukha, rights of way and rights to well and water belonging to a joint family are indivisible. If there is no evidence that at partition of the family estate, such rights were divided, the law will hold that they continued to retain their indivisible character having regard to the nature of the rights in question.

In the absence of anything to show that on the partition of a joint estate, a certain passage was allotted to either one party or the other exclusively, the presumption is that it continued to be joint and undivided even after the partition. This is a presumption of Hindu Law and can only be rebutted by clear proof that the passage was not reserved as joint but was divided and allotted to one of the parties exclusively as his share.

If two houses were common and a certain right of way belonged to the parties, the passage being common then, under the Easements Act, it must be presumed, in the absence of any express agreement between the parties, that at partition, the passage was reserved for common enjoyment.

An Appellate Court is bound to consider and dispose of a point distinctly raised by the parties and dealt with by the Court of first instance and not abandoned at the hearing before the Appellate Court. NATHUBAI v. BAI HANSGAVRI, 14 BOM. L. R. 418; 36 B. 379 818

Held, that the alleged offer by the accused amounted to an admission that he had a large quantity of contraband opium in his possession and, being an admission of an offence under the Opium Act amounted to a confession and was thus inadmissible under section 25 of the Evidence Act.

The test which has to be applied in deciding whether section 25, Evidence Act, applies is the position of the person at the time when it is proposed to prove the admission, not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it.

The decree-holder attached his judgment-debtor's house. Thereupon the mother of the judgment-debtor preferred a claim under Order XXI, rule 58 of the Civil Procedure Code. She did not prosecute her claim which was dismissed for default. The decree-holder then purchased the house at the execution sale and applied for delivery of actual possession. The peon who went to execute the writ was obstructed and the claimant put in an application under Order XXI, rule 97 of the Code:

Held, that the order of dismissal of the claim was, under Order XXI, rule 63, final till a regular suit was instituted and successfully prosecuted; and that consequently the claimant could not now be allowed to practically re-iterate the claim which she had preferred and which was dismissed without investigation by reason of her own default. Execution of decree—contd.

An order passed on an execution petition ending with the words "Petition struck off" is an order not known to the law and its effect has to be determined by a consideration of the circumstances of the case and the terms of the order itself.

Where, therefore, an application was made for the execution of a decree by sale of a debt, but the applicants failed to pay certain warrant fees, as the sale had been stayed by an order of the High Court, and the petition was, consequently, "struck off," the order simply amounts to an adjournment sine die. The plaintiff brought a suit against four defendants for redemption and recovery of arrears of rent due to the plaintiffs under a zur-i-peshgi lease. The suit was decreed ex parte against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the decree directed that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 should merely yield up possession of two villages. The plaintiffs did not appeal against the decree so far as defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were concerned, but executed it and recovered possession of the two villages.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 applied to have the ex parte decree against them set aside. In that application defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were not made parties. The Court set aside the ex parte decree against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but declined to re-open the whole suit even as against the other defendants. The plaintiffs moved the High Court:

Held, (1) that there was really no question of jurisdiction or irregular exercise of it within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, (2) that having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs were satisfied with their decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 4, the decree should not be set aside in so far as those defendants were concerned, (3) that the case was not covered by the proviso to rule 13 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code, and (4) that as defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were not parties to the application to set aside the ex parte decree, the Court below should not have passed an order prejudicial to them behind their backs. The English law of fixtures cannot be applied in this country as based on equitable grounds.

The plaintiff, in execution of a decree for rent against the 2nd defendant, purchased a holding on May 19, 1911. He obtained delivery of possession through Court on August 19. Crops had then been grown by the second defendant and they remained on the land till December 25, when they were cut and taken away by the first defendant. The plaintiff brought this suit on the ground that as the crops were grown after his purchase by the second defendant on land, the title whereto had vested in him, the crops became his property:

The fact that a man who files a document is interested in establishing its contents, does not raise a presumption that he filed it knowing it to be forged.

Conduct is the principal criterion of guilty knowledge.

Where a man filed a document upon which he relied but when it was discovered that the document had been forged, he fled away:

Held, that his conduct was in no way consistent with his innocence.

The filing of a document as the basis of a plaint or as a necessary sequel to the pleas in the plaint is itself an user; and it then becomes incumbent on the person using it to show that he filed the document in all good faith believing it to be genuine.

Process was issued against the accused under section 506, Indian Penal Code, and he was tried under that section. He was discharged of an offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, and his plea to the charge under section 506 was not recorded.

Held, that the proceedings were irregular; that the plea of the accused ought to have been taken under section 506, as the law provides that in summons cases the first thing to be done is to ask the accused what he has got to say; and that the discharge of the accused under section 500, when he was charged under section 506, was without jurisdiction.

Gift—Deed of gift—Validity—Burden of proof—Absence of power of revocation—Suit for setting aside deed—Grounds for setting aside—Conditional gift—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 126.

The burden of proving that a deed of voluntary gift, executed by an old and infirm woman, was executed with the full knowledge of its contents and that she did so willingly and without any pressure or solicitations which might amount to the exercise of undue influence, lies heavily on the donee. It should be proved that the donor thoroughly understood the contents of the document she executed, that all the material clauses were explained to her, that she appreciated the effect the execution of the deed would have on her with respect to her property and that the deed carried out her intentions at that time. If these facts are proved, it would then be for the other side to show that some substantial reason exists why the deed should be set aside.

Any person of full age and sound mind, who has executed a voluntary deed of gift by which he has denuded himself of his property, is bound by his act; and if he himself comes to have the deed set aside, especially if he comes a long time afterwards, he must prove some substantial reason why the deed should be set aside.

A voluntary deed of gift is not voidable by the donor merely because it does not contain a power of revocation.

The absence of the power of revocation in a deed of gift is one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration when the Court has to consider whether a deed of gift shall stand or be set aside.

The donor and the donee may agree that on the happening of a specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor, a gift shall be suspended or revoked; but a gift which the parties agree shall be revocable wholly or in part at the mere will of the donor, is void wholly or in part as the case may be.

An old, infirm and illiterate woman executed a deed of gift by which she conveyed all her property to one of her nephews. She executed the deed of gift voluntarily while in possession of all her senses and without the exercise of any fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence on her. When she executed the deed of gift, she fully understood its contents and the effect it would have of divesting her of her property. The gift was her "free determined act" and she intended the gift to be irrevocable. Subsequently, she herself sued to have the gift set aside:

Held, that the deed of gift was binding on her and could not be set aside. The mere fact that the donor's feelings towards the donee subsequently underwent a change was not sufficient to set aside the gift. RAJARAM v. KHANDU BALU, 14 BOM. L. R. 340 529

———— of mere propietary rights or usufruct for maintenance—Restraint on alienation by donee, condition as to—Sale in invitum—Voluntary transfer.

The predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs-appellants executed a deed in 1873 in favour of the ancestors of the defendants-respondents by which certain land was granted to them for their maintenance without any power to transfer.

The deed authorized the grantees to cultivate the land and to appropriate the usufruct thereof, but enjoined that if they wanted to transfer their rights, they must do so to the grantor or his descendants. It also provided that if the donee at any time died childless the land was to revert to the donor or to his heirs:

Held, (1) that the deed was not a gift of full proprietary rights but only of usufruct of the land for the purposes of maintenance;

(2) that the deed not being a gift of proprietary rights, the conditions in restraint of alienation were valid, as they formed an essential portion of the grant itself;

(3) that the sale in execution of a decree based on the mortgage of the said lands could not be considered as a sale 'in invitum', which could override the provisions of the deed of grant but must be treated as a voluntary transfer, the decree and sale being the necessary consequences of such transfer and as proceeding directly out of the same. Held, (1) that the Government remained the proprietors of the land and could deal with the land in any way they pleased like any private owner;

(2) that the Government as proprietors of the land could resume it when they required it for their proprietary purposes.

Government purposes must be construed as meaning that they were purposes of Government as the State proprietor, purposes which Government alone were entitled to prescribe in the exercise of their discretionary power. SAPURLO SABSHETTI v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 14 BOM. L. R. 414; 36 B. 438 782

* * * * *"

Held, (1) that this was a grant only of the land revenue, and

(2) that a suit for a declaration that the resumption of same by Government was illegal was barred by section 4 of the Pensions Act.

Government may grant the kudivaram to one person and the melvaram to another; similarly, though both the kudivaram and melvaram may be combined in the hands of the Government, there is nothing to prevent it from treating them as distinct interests and granting them to the same person.

Land revenue is not a servitude attaching to the land. The kudivaram and melvaram are distinct interests constituting the totality of ownership in the land. The revenue is not a servitude on property which belongs to the kudivaram holder.

Section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871 does not require that the grant should be of the land revenue alone in order to shut out the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit relating to a grant of land revenue.

Even where land revenue is granted along with the land itself, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to determine a suit which relates to the land revenue alone.

Freedom from liability to land revenue is not identical with holding a grant of land revenue. The land revenue arising from a man's own holding, when it is remitted and the land pays nothing, is rather extinguished than granted.

The Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) contemplates money payments to be received through the Collector or recovered from persons bound to pay revenue.

Quære:—Whether, when there is a grant of the land revenue only to a person already owning the kudivaram right, there is anything in section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871, construed in the light of Regulation IV of 1832 and Act IV of 1862, to take away the jurisdiction of a Civil Court with respect to a claim to the kudivaram right? The plaintiff, who was the proprietor of a village, sued the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were the holders of a grove, and the defendant No. 3, a mortgagee in possession of the right of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the grove, for possession on the ground that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had forfeited their rights by transferring possession to defendant No. 3. The wajib-ul-arz of the village provided that ".....without the permission of the proprietor the holder of a grove has no right to sell or mortgage the trees; and if the said grove-holder abandons his residence within the limits of the proprietor's estate he forfeits his entire rights in respect of the grove":

Held, that the position of a grove-holder in a case like the present was that of a licensee entitled to use for certain purposes, land belonging to the proprietor who was the licensor

According to the general principles of law applicable to leases, the forfeiture of a lease is not involved in the case of the breach of any condition for which forfeiture is not prescribed as the proper penalty under the terms of the lease or agreement under which the lessee holds. There is no reason why a similar principle should not apply to the case of a licensor and licensee generally.

There is an essential distinction between a transfer by way of lease or mortgage and a transfer by way of sale in which case different considerations would apply. ALI MUHAMMAD KHAN v. CHHEDAN, 15 O. C. 91 385

The holding of a hat on a man's own property is not in itself a wrongful act and, therefore, any ulterior consequences which may arise from it cannot give rise to any proceeding against the owner of the land for committing an act likely to cause a breach of the peace, unless those ulterior consequences are made the basis of the proceedings.

An injunction cannot be issued to a person restraining him from doing a lawful act upon his own property.

Therefore, an order directing a man not to use his property in a lawful manner, for instance, not to establish a hat on his own land, does not come within the purview of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

——— ——— Family settlements, binding nature of—Inquiry into antecedent rights of parties, whether permissible.

In judging of the validity of a compromise, Courts are not entitled to inquire into the rights of parties as they stood before the compromise to see whether the compromise has recognized them; the inquiry should be restricted to the question whether the claims advanced by either side were bona fide and whether the compromise really is in settlement of such claims. Every compromise may involve the giving up of certain claims to which a party may be rightly entitled, and the acquisition of interests to which he may have no claim. But if such compromise is a settlement of disputes advanced bona fide, then, prima facie, it ought to be upheld. This reason applies with greater force in cases of family settlements where the peace of the family is involved, more especially when the settlements were effected long prior to the date of the dispute between the parties. ——————— Invalid adoption, effect of—Right of adoptee in natural family—Adoption af orphan whether valid—Presumption--Estoppel.

An invalid adoption does not, under Hindu Law, per se destroy the adoptee's rights in his natural family.

As no one but the parents of a child can give him away in adoption, an orphan cannot be given away in adoption either by himself or by any one else.

There is no presumption in law that an apparent adoption, which had taken place long ago and was throughout acquiesced in by all concerned, was made in pursuance of an authority given by some persons competent to give away the son in adoption.

The adoption of an orphan would be valid, if there was evidence to show that the adoptee's natural parents had given the boy away to a person who made the adoption years afterwards and even after the death of the natural father.

There is no estoppel against the plea of invalid adoption, even though the adoption was acquiesced in by the family, so as to debar the adoptee being restored to his natural family, unless the position of those contesting such right has, in consequence of the adoption, been changed to their disadvantage. The boy died and in 1883, she adopted another boy still purporting to act in accordance with her husband's Will. This boy also died, so in 1899 she adopted the defendant. At that time she executed a deed with full appreciation of its contents. In the deed she said: "My husband made this Will—'I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me. * * If the son who might be adopted should die, you will have power to adopt another boy.'"

In the following year, one B., claiming as reversionary heir, instituted a suit against the plaintiff and the defendant for a declaration that the adoption of the defendant was invalid. In her defence, the plaintiff informed the Court that she had full oral authority from her husband, and that he had not limited her to one, two, three, or four sons. That suit failed.

The plaintiff and the defendant having since quarrelled, the present suit was brought in order to get rid of the adoption altogether:

Held, on a consideration of all the facts, that the defendant was duly adopted.

Held, also, that, as the plaintiff asserted her authority in the most solemn manner, she could not now be allowed to change her story without causing grave injustice to those who have acted in reliance upon her representations, and that she must, therefore, be held

Under the Hindu Law, a woman's estate can be created in favour of a Hindu female quite as much by contract of parties or by a grant as it can be obtained by her by inheritance.

It is competent in an undivided Hindu family for a member to grant to his deceased brother's widow the share of her husband which the latter would have got on partition.

Such an estate would be held by the grantee as the ordinary widow's estate, which would be deemed to have been given her in lieu of maintenance, and, on her death, the property would pass to her husband's heirs.

P. and C. were members of an undivided family. On P.'s death, the property passed to C. by survivorship, L., the junior widow of P., and C. entered into an agreement, whereby, inter alia, he agreed to give her his deceased brother's half share in the properties. After C.'s death, the properties were equally divided between L. and B., C.'s widow, at the instance of arbitrators. In a suit by plaintiff, the step-daughter of L. against her father's reversioner:

Under the law of the Vyavahara Mayukha as also under that of Mitakshara, property inherited by sons from their mother descends to them, not as a joint tenancy, but as a tenancy-in-common.

The basic principle of joint tenancy as distinguished from tenancy-in-common under Hindu Law explained.

A joint tenancy is created where property is inherited by unobstructed succession called rikhta. In such a case, heirs take the property as co-parceners.

Hindu Law—contd.

A tenancy-in-common is created where property is inherited by obstructed succession. In this case, the idea of inheritance and the idea of partition go together; one is a necessary complement of the other, so that, at the very moment the inheritance falls in, the heirs take by partition, that is, as owners of defined shares and, therefore, as tenants in-common.

Heritage in the case of stridhan is obstructed succession.

Where Nilkanth is silent on any point, his silence must be regarded as assent to the proposition laid down in the Mitakshara.

Self-acquired property is that which is acquired by a member of a joint family by his own exertions without detriment to the joint property and not thrown into the common stock.

Property, originally self-acquired, becomes joint when it is thrown into the common stock and is mixed up with the joint estate. BAI PARSON v. BAI SOMLI, 14 BOM. L. R. 40); 36 B. 424 774

The right of a family member to claim maintenance from the holder of an impartible estate must be decided on the footing of the estate being joint and must depend on the question whether, if the estate were partible, the person claiming the maintenance would be entitled to maintain a suit for partition.

The question of succession to an impartible estate discussed.

The degree of relationship for determining the right to maintenance out of an impartible estate must b taken to be the same as for determining the right to partition in the case of a partible estate.

The right to maintenance is not lost by reason of the fact that the person claiming maintenance is only an adopted and not an aurasa son of his father.

The fact that a member is removed more than three degrees from the common ancestor is not a bar to his succession by survivorship and, therefore, is not a bar to his right to maintenance. ABHINANA PURNA PRIYA v. ARNI RANGASAWMI, 23 M. L. J. 79; (1912) 1 M. W. N. 790; 12 M. L. T. 245 412

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 3 (b), 11, 31—"Person interested", meaning of—Duty of Collector—Court's duty—Apportionment—Poundage and fees—Liability of Government.

Under section 3 (b) of the Land Acquisition Act, the expression "person interested" includes all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of the land.

A person may be interested in the compensation money without having an interest in the land in the legal sense of the term.

The Collector has, under section 11, to inquire into the value of the land and into the respective interests of the persons claiming the compensation, and after awarding a sum for compensation, he has to apportion the compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land of whom or whose claims he has information.

What the Collector and the Court have to do is to apportion the sum awarded amongst the persons interested as far as possible in proportion to the value of their interests. It is impossible to lay down any general rule which can be followed. The market-value of an interest, if ascertainable, may afford some guide towards ascertaining the amount to be apportioned in respect of that interest, but that can only be considered in relation to the total sum awarded as compensation.

Land Acquisition Act—contd.

It is the duty of Government, under section 31, to deposit in Court the whole of the compensation money which it may be required to deposit by the Act, free from any deduction. When a demand is made by Court Officials under Court Rules for poundage and fees in respect of such deposit, Government has to pay such poundage and fees in addition to the compensation money. The Court has no power to direct that a portion of the compensation money deposited should be refunded to Government as representing the poundage and fees paid by it when the money was deposited in Court. As the money is compensation in respect of land acquired under the Act, the Court has power only to direct payment of such money, without any deduction, to the person or persons interested.

When land is acquired for a Company, the poundage and fees, which may become payable during the course of proceedings, may be recovered by Government from the Company as costs of acquisition. PESTONJI JEHANGIR, In re, 14 BOM. L. R. 507 771

Where permanent occupancy-rights have been granted to certain individuals for the benefit of a community to which they belong, the onus of proving an express or implied surrender of such rights lies on the party affirming it.

The sub-division of the lands and even the surrender of a portion thereof by the grantees will not be inconsistent with the latter continuing to hold the lands in their occupation on the terms of the original grant, i.e., by right of permanent occupancy, although community of interest may have ceased as between themselves.

If the same lands had been held by different persons in different years, this would be prima facie evidence of the tenure being inconsistent with the continuance of the rights under the original grant.

Material variation in the extent of the lands held in each year might lead to the same inference, though it might also be explicable on the ground that the pattas for each year were only for the extent cultivated during the year. VELUSAMI TEVAR v. AROKYA UDAYAN 119

A talukdar leased the collection of rents of a certain village to the plaintiff for a certain period and it was provided in the lease that in case of breach of certain terms of the lease or of the expiry of the term fixed, the talukdar would have a right of re-entry.

Before the expiry of the term, the talukdar took forcible possession of the village and began to collect rent from the tenants. The lessee then sued the tenants for the rent:

Held, (1) that the lessee was entitled to obtain decrees, inasmuch as the relation of landlord and tenant had not ceased between the lessee and the tenants inasmuch as the lessee had not been, in due course of law, ejected and the lease only provided for re-entry in case the lessee agreed to give up the possession and not for re-entry by force;

(2) that section 138 of the Oudh Rent Act had no application to the facts of the case, and the talukdar had no right to be joined as a defendant in the plaintiff's suit.

The inquiry contemplated by section 138 of the Rent Act is an inquiry relating to a period prior to that for which rent is claimed.

The question whether a legal right had determined is a question of law and not of fact and a decision on such point is open to second appeal.

If a lease reserves to the lessor the right of entry in case of a breach of a covenant, the result of the breach is at best to confer upon the lessor the right of re-entry, and not to entitle the lessor to make a forcible entry. If the lessee resists the exercise of the right to re-enter, the lessor's only remedy is to enforce his right to re-enter by a suit in ejectment.

——— ——— ———Lease—Landlord's obstruction to tenant's peaceful enjoyment—Right of tenant to withhold rent—Right of defendant to plead as set-off damages sustained in action for rent—Apportionment—Constructive eviction—Abandonment by tenant —Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 108 (b) and (c), 111, 114.

The Transfer of Property Act, (IV of 1882), does not deal with the question of the lessee's right to withhold payment of the whole or part of the rent, where his possession of the premises has been seriously obstructed by the landlord. Section 108 does not deal with the defence to an action for rent. It enacts that the lessor is bound, on the lessee's request, to put him in possession of property, but does not say that, if he does not do so, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent.

The Transfer of Property Act has made no change in the rule that non-delivery of possession of the premises is a good answer to a suit for rent.

Under clause (c) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, the actual prior payment of rent is not a condition for the lessee's right to enjoyment without interruption. The clause does not purport to confer any right or cast any liability on the lessor or lessee as a matter of law, but to state that a certain contract shall be taken to have been entered into between the parties. If the clause is to be read as importing a condition, it can only be so read in cases where the lessee claims actually to enforce his right to damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

The method of obstructing the tenant's enjoyment without actually evicting or turning him out is known as constructive eviction, i.e., where the landlord commits wrongful and unlawful acts which deprive the tenant of the beneficial use and enjoyment of the property. In such cases of constructive eviction, the tenant enjoys immunity from the payment of rent until the landlord again permits him to have quiet enjoyment.

The tenant, however, is not entitled to withhold payment of the entire rent due to the landlord, where the obstruction caused by the latter has entailed on the tenant damages in a lesser amount than the amount of rent due by him.

If the landlord does not put the lessee in possession of the whole of the premises leased, the latter is not bound to pay any portion of the rent. If the landlord is unable to do so, the tenant may be entitled to rescind the lease, but he cannot insist on keeping possession of a part of the premises and yet refuse to pay rent for that part. If, after putting the tenant in possession of the property leased, the landlord obstructs his enjoyment of a portion thereof, it is open to the tenant to say that he is not willing to enjoy a portion of the premises, paying proportionate rent, but would treat the whole lease as rescinded during the period of such obstruction, but, in that case, it is his duty to restore to the landlord the part of the premises still remaining in his occupation and not retain possession of it until he is again put in possession of the whole of the leased property.

Landlord and Tenant—contd.

Where a tenant remains in a portion of the premises leased after obstruction by the landlord, the landlord is entitled to rent for that portion either on the contract of lease or as compensation for use and occupation and in such cases the tenant is estopped from pleading that he is not liable for the rent of that portion. His right in law is to damages, while he is liable to pay the rent and it is only a rule of convenience that he should be allowed to enforce his right for damages by setting them off in the landlord's action for rent. MEENAKSHI SUNDARA NACHIAR v. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTY, 12 M. L. T. 124; 23 M. L. J. 119; (1912) 1 M. W. N. 813 711

The fact that the landlord himself took a mortgage of a certain non-transferable occupancy-holding under him, would, by itself, be no evidence of transferability of jotes, because a landlord himself can purchase or take a mortgage of a holding though non-transferable.

The defendant purchased a non-transferable occupancy-holding in execution of his own mortgage decree. The plaintiff-landlord held a mortgage of the same holding, and the defendant took an assignment of the mortgage for consideration. The plaintiff had full knowledge of the purchase of the holding by the defendant and of the fact that he was taking the assignment in order to perfect his title. The plaintiff subsequently sued the defendant for recovery of possession, on the ground that as the holding was non-transferable, the defendant got no title from his purchase:

The plaintiff then sued to eject all the defendants on the ground that the tenancy was forfeited by disclaimer:

When rent has been received from the transferee of a holding not as a transferee but only as the agent or representative of the original tenant, there is no recognition of the validity of the transfer.

In a suit for rent, the tenant alleged that he had transferred the holding, and the transferee was added as a defendant. The latter then made a payment of the amount claimed to the plaintiff's Pleader who certified the payment to the Court and made over the amount to the plaintiff:

Held, that the acceptance of the sum paid by the transferee did not amount in law to a recognition of the validity of the transfer.

A Pleader can bind his client by an admission upon a question of fact, provided that such question falls within the scope of the suit in which he has been retained.

Therefore, where there is no question as to the liability of a transferee-defendant in a suit against the transferor-tenant, much less is there any question as to the validity of the alleged transfer, it would be beyond the scope of the authority of the Pleader to bind his client by an admission of the validity of the transfer. After the expiry of the period, no fresh settlement having been taken by the tenant, the landlord sued for rent at the higher amount:

Held, that rent being defined as what was lawfully payable in money, the amount payable during the first three years of the tenancy was Rs. 8 odd; that if at the end of that time the landlord desired to realise rent at Rs. 23, that was enhancement of the rent; that the stipulations in the kabulyat were a mere device to defeat the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the landlord was entitled to a decree for rent at Rs. 8 odd only. In a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagee was entitled to immediate possession but he never took possession under the mortgage. He did not take foreclosure proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 within 12 years of the date fixed in the deed of mortgage for payment of mortgage-money.

When property sold is in the possession of another person as lessee, it is not capable of being taken into physical possession by the vendee, and the limitation for a pre-emption claim runs from the date of the registration of the deed of sale.

By a sale-deed executed and registered on the 26th June 1897, A. purchased certain land. The land conveyed by the sale had already been leased to A. for nine years by a lease executed on the 9th April 1895 and expiring on the 5th June 1904. The sale-deed purported to take effect from the expiry of the lease but did not reserve any rent to the vendor.

On 1st July 1903, B. filed a suit for pre-emption against A., who pleaded that the suit was time-barred. B., then, urged that the sale only took effect from the date of the expiry of the lease. It was then pleaded on A's. behalf that in that case the suit was premature, and on that view, it was dismissed.

On the expiry of the lease, B. again sued A. for pre-emption:

Held, (1) that there was no res judicata against A. as the decision in the previous suit merely amounted to this that on B.'s own contention, the claim then made was premature; there was no decision of the plea that the claim was even then time-barred or not;

(2) that there was no estoppel by A.'s plea in the former case as B.'s position had in no way been affected by it, for if limitation ran from the date of sale, the claim was then already barred ;

(3) that if the lease did not merge in the sale, the present suit was barred under the 2nd part of the third column of Article 10 of the Limitation Act;

(4) that if the lease merged in the sale, the possession of A. was under the sale from the date of sale and on this view too, the suit was time-barred. RAMJI v. SHEIKH MANSUR, 8 N. L. R. 68 890

Section 12 of the Limitation Act, 1908, has been made applicable to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Therefore, allowance must now be made for the period occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree.

There is no rule in the High Court providing that the Judges shall, at the time of signing decrees, note the date on which they sign so that in fact there is no definite record from which the date when a decree is signed can be accurately ascertained.

The principle underlying section 12 is that the applicant is only entitled to be excused for a delay for which he was not himself responsible.

A judgment of the High Court against which the applicant sought to appeal to His Majesty in Council was delivered on July 7, 1911. The applicant stated on affirmation in an affidavit that the decree was signed by the Judges about a month after the date of the judgment and received by the Peshkar from the Bench Clerk on August 8, 1911, and it was not till then that the decree was available for copying. Application for a copy of the judgment and decree of the High Court was not made till January 26th, 1912, that is to say, more than 6 months after the date of the judgment, and the copy was delivered on the same day. Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was then made on January 30th, 1912:

Held, that the applicant, having failed to apply for a copy of the judgment and decree within the period of limitation, cannot be allowed to say that he was prevented from filing the application in time by reason of the fact that the decree was not signed and that, therefore, he was not entitled to a deduction of the period which expired between the signing of the judgment and the signing of the decree.

But as there were grounds to support the contention of the applicant that he was misled by the Full Bench ruling in Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dasi, 13 C. 104, the High Court, under section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908, admitted the application. When the appeal was presented to the High Court, the period of limitation had expired but the appellant, who was a minor, sought the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act:

Held, (1) that as section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act clearly specified the High Court as the Appellate Court, the appeal was filed in the Divisional Court by carelessness and not by mistake of law;

(2) that there was no sufficient cause for not filing the appeal in the High Court within the time prescribed;

(3) that the time taken up in the Divisional Court could not be excluded;

(4) that the fact that the appellant was a minor did not justify extension of the period of limitation. HARNAM KAUR v. SOHAN SINGH, 205 P. W. R. 1912 170

On 5th January 1893, D. and P. as guardian of her minor son B. executed a deed of sale in respect of the 4-anna share in favour of the defendant-appellant. The vendee had been in possession of the share ever since. On 11th September 1909, B. instituted this suit to recover possession of the whole share conveyed by the sale-deed of 1893 on the allegation that the sale was made for a fictitious price without any legal necessity during his minority.

It was found as a fact by the Courts below that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he came of age within three years before the institution of the suit:

Held, that the case was governed by Article 144 and not Article 127 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

The word "share" in Article 127 is used as a verb and not a noun. The suit contemplated by Article 127 is a suit by a member of a joint family against other members of the joint family to be restored to joint enjoyment on the allegation of having been unlawfully excluded from it. The Article does not apply to a suit where the alleged joint family property has passed by sale to a stranger. BISHESHAR TEWARI v. BISHESHAR DAYAL, 15 O. C. 111 394

——— arts. 139, 140, 142, 144—Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant by stranger—Tenancy from year to year—Abandonment by tenant—Ejectment suit by landlord against trespasser—Limitation.

Where a tenant, who was holding land as a tenant from year to year, was dispossessed by a stranger who, from the date of dispossession, claimed to hold absolutely against both landlord and tenant, the landlord must sue to eject the trespasser before the expiry of 12 years from the date of such dispossession, especially where the land has been abandoned by the tenant more than 12 years before suit.

For such a suit, the cause of action does not arise on the day when the landlord gives notice to the tenant to quit.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—Quære:—Whether, when land is in possession of a tenant, the term of whose lease is outstanding, and such tenant is ousted from possession by a trespasser, time will not run against the owner until after the expiry of the term?

Per Sundara Aiyar, J.—Possession held by a person must be held to be in his own right even in cases that are governed by Article 144 of the Limitation Act, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary or any relationship between the parties or other circumstances that would throw on him the onus of proving that he intended to hold possession in denial of the owner's right.

Article 140 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit against a tenant, as Article 139 provides limitation for such a suit. The inference to be drawn from Article 140 is, that in a suit against a trespasser by one who had leased his land to a tenant, limitation is not postponed necessarily until his estate falls into possession. If the trespasser asserts only a right of tenancy, then, no doubt, limitation would not commence against the landlord until the tenancy (if his right to it is complete) has come to an end. If he has not acquired by his adverse possession the right of a tenant under the statute, then Article 144 would be applicable, his possession being regarded as adverse to the lessor only when the latter's estate falls into possession.

As against a stranger, the landlord is entitled to recover possession even though his tenant's lease has not been terminated, and when the stranger purports to hold absolutely and not by the acquisition of a prescriptive title as against the tenant, the landlord's cause of action arises on the date of the dispossession of the tenant.

Article 140 of the Limitation Act applies to suits by remainder-men and reversioners against all persons, including trespassers and not merely against persons, holding a limited estate, on the expiration of which the remainder or reversion falls in. Madras Land Encroachment Act (Mad. III of 1905), s. 14—Suit for refund of penal assessment levied—Party aggrieved—Cause of action—Notice by Government, whether canstitutes cause of action—Proof of possession—Presumption as to prior possession.

Under Madras Act III of 1905, section 14, the cause of action arises when a party deems himself aggrieved by the levy of a penalty or by eviction or forfeiture, that is, on the date of the levy of the assessment or penalty or of the eviction or forfeiture. A mere preliminary notice given by Government before exercising these powers under the Act cannot be regarded as a proceeding by which a person is "aggrieved". The notice itself is no grievance and cannot be the starting point for the computation of limitation.

When possession for a certain period is shown, it will be open to a Court deciding the facts to prove that possession prior to that period was also in the party whose subsequent possession is proved. Malabar Tarwad—Possession, suit for, by a member—Subsistence of mortgages on property—Whether plaintiff should first sue to set aside mortgages—Right of junior members of a Hindu family.

A junior member of a Hindu family or of a Malabar Tarwad need not, in the first instance, sue to set aside all alienations made by the manager or Karnavan before suing to recover possession of the property alienated by him. He may sue to recover possession on his title and will be entitled to recover such possession if the defendant does not prove the validity and binding effect of the alienation on the plaintiff.

In a suit for recovery of a sum of money claimed as malikana, the burden lies upon the plaintiff in the first instance to prove the amount of the net assets of the estate, with reference to which malikana is to be calculated. The burden is discharged on the production by the plaintiff of a judgment in a previous litigation between the parties in which it was determined that the net assets amounted approximately to a certain sum. The onus then shifts to the defendant to establish that since the date of the decision in question, the condition of the property had deteriorated and that the assets at the present time are smaller than at the time of the previous litigation.

In a previous litigation between the parties, it was decided that the defendants were not entitled to deduct the Government revenue and the cesses but only the collection charges from the gross income of the estate in order to determine the net assets upon which malikana was to be calculated:

Held, that this being a mixed question of fact and law, the decision upon it, though erroneous, was binding upon the parties and their successors.

Although interest on arrears of malikana cannot be claimed under the provisions of the Interest Act, because the sum which the plaintiff seeks to recover is not due under a written instrument, nor has there been a demand of payment in writing, yet it is open to the Court to make a decree for damages for wrongful detention of the plaintiff's money.

The limitation applicable to a claim for damages is that provided by Article 115, of the Limitation Act, and the plaintiffs are entitled to damages upon each annual sum in arrear only for three years antecedent to the suit.

A decree, under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, can only be made after it has been found upon the sale of the hypothecated properties that the judgment-debt has not been satisfied thereby. Till that stage is reached, no question of a personal liability arises.

Therefore, at the preliminary stage of the suit, no personal decree can be made in favour of the plaintiff in addition to the decree for sale of the hypothecated properties. MOHAMAYA PROSAD SINGH v. RAM KHELAWAN SINGH, 15 C. L. J. 684 911

In an action for wrongful dismissal of a servant, the defendant, the master, pleaded fraud, general misconduct, negligence and breach of contract on the part of the servant.

Master and Servant—contd.

The lower Court framed a general issue as to the justification for dismissal, in which the question of negligence and breach of contract was not separated from the question of fraud and misconduct. The parties, however, produced evidence on all the points. On appeal, the allegations of fraud and misconduct were abandoned by the master and he sought to rely only on negligence and breach of contract by the servant:

Held, that the master was entitled to drop the allegations of fraud and misconduct and rely entirely on negligence and breach of contract.

The object of any system of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions that are about to be argued in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues.

No question of surprise arises if a point is covered by the pleadings and evidence is adduced by both sides regarding it, although no issue on the point has been framed by the lower Court.

The ordinary meaning of the word "to guarantee" is to 'promise' or to 'undertake.'

The argument ab inconvenienti is only admissible in the construction of an agreement where the meaning is obscure. A possibility of hardship to one of the parties under an agreement cannot be allowed to obliterate the terms of such agreement.

If there are two clauses or parts of a deed repugnant to each other, the first will be received and the latter rejected unless there is some special reason to the contrary.

When a man chooses to answer for the voluntary act of a third person, he is held to warrant his ability to procure that act.

Where the master does not repudiate a contract which has been broken by the servant, but merely intimates that he would claim damages for the breach of contract and allows the servant to continue to perform his part of the contract, such conduct amounts to a waiver of the master's right to repudiate the contract.

Ordinarily, it is not necessary that a servant should be dismissed by his master for a valid reason; it is sufficient if a valid reason in fact exists, even if the master be not aware of it at the time of the dismissal. But this rule has no application to a case where the master has knowledge of the facts constituting the justification for the dismissal, and deliberately condones them and waives his right to dismiss the servant on account of them.

An agreement to retain or employ a servant does not involve an undertaking to supply work unless such an undertaking is expressly contained in or must be necessarily inferred from the whole of the terms of the agreement. But a contract, in which the servant is engaged for a definite period and is to be paid by wages estimated with reference to his work, does ordinarily involve an obligation to supply work and this inference is stronger if the contract contains a stipulation providing for dismissal by giving a specified length of notice.

In actions for wrongful dismissal, the general rule is that the plaintiff may recover damages for the whole unexpired period of service. Where, however, it is provided that the agreement may be terminated at an earlier date by giving previous notice, the parties may reasonably be held to have contemplated the time limit of the notice as attaching to any liability for wrongful termination of the agreement. In such cases, the damages for wrongful dismissal should be limited to the period of notice required under the agreement.

Where the law creates a duty and a party is disabled from performing it, without any default of his own, by the act of God, the law will excuse him; but where a party by his own contract creates a duty, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity.

The ordinary measure of damages in an action for conversion is the market-value of goods at the time of the conversion. JACOB ELIAS SASSOON v. DOSSA KALIAN, 5 S. L. R. 192 757

A mortgage by conditional sale was executed in 1830 with a provision that the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession of the property if the mortgage-debt was not paid on a certain date in 1850. The debt was not paid on that date. No application under Regulation VII of 1806 was made for foreclosure of the mortgaged property. On 11th of July 1910, the mortgagee brought a suit for foreclosure :

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation.

The cause of action arose on the mortgagor's failure to pay the mortgage-money on the due date in 1850 and the mortgagee's right to possession of the property mortgaged was extinguished under section 1, clause 12 of Act XIV of 1859 as soon as twelve years had elapsed from the due date and the subsequent creation of foreclosure suits could not revive the extinct right.

A person, who purchases property at an auction sale subject to a prior mortgage, is estopped from challenging the mortgage on the ground of the failure of consideration or undue influence.

A distinction must be drawn between the case of a purchaser who buys property not subject to a mortgage but with notice of a mortgage and subject to such risks as the notice may involve, and the case of a person who purchases property which is declared to be subject to prior mortgages. In the former case, the Court does not decide whether the mortgage subsists or not. If there is in reality a subsisting mortgage, the purchaser has to redeem it.

If, on the other hand, the mortgage specified in the proclamation of sale, is a fictitious mortgage or did not subsist at the date of the sale by reason of its having been previously discharged by payment, the purchaser acquires the property free from liability for the mortgage.

When the sale is held subject to a mortgage, the purchaser does not get any greater right than the right of redeeming the mortgage.

Where property is sold in accordance with a decree for sale on mortgage, the purchaser of the property cannot raise a plea of priority, in respect of the mortgage, not set up by the mortgagee in his suit for sale.

The purchaser of an equity of redemption stands in the shoes of the mortgagor by virtue of his purchase and cannot, therefore, be allowed to be in a better position than the original mortgagor himself. If, therefore, the purchaser raises a plea as to want of consideration, the burden of establishing it would lie upon him.

Where, in such cases, the mortgagor himself has not raised the plea as to undue influence or as to the bargain being unconscionable, the purchaser, who has purchased the property subject to such a mortgage, cannot take those pleas and ask the Court to reduce the interest on the ground of its being a hard bargain. Plaintiff sued for redemption of a mortgage as the purchaser of a part of the equity of redemption. First defendant, who was one of the several mortgagees, was the purchaser of the other part:

Held, that the plaintiff was both bound and entitled to redeem the whole mortgage and not only the part purchased by him.

Both under section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act and the law prior to its enactment, it was necessary, for the consolidation of mortgages that the two mortgages to be consolidated should have become united in title or come into the same hand. VELAYADAIN CHETTY v. ALANGARAN CHETTY 605

The de facto guardian of a minor can, under Muhammadan Law, alienate the minor's property in cases of urgent and imperative necessity, whether the property be moveable or immoveable. He can also do acts on behalf of the minor which, from their nature, must necessarily be beneficial to the minor. In either class of cases, there is no substantial difference between the power of such a person who has assumed the duties of guardian without lawful authority and of a legal guardian, though there are cases wherein the powers exercisable by a lawful guardian are not within the competence of other persons.

According to the general principles of Muhammadan Law, the sale of a minor's property by an unauthorized guardian, even if it was not made for a valid cause, i.e., for necessity, or under circumstances which would make the transaction purely advantageous to the minor, would, strictly speaking, be neither void nor voidable in the ordinary sense of the term. An alienation of the minor's property without any justifying cause is regarded as maugut, i. e., its validity will depend upon the minor accepting the transaction on attaining majority. It is not inoperative until it is avoided, nor is it invalid unless and until it is ratified. It is a transaction in a state of suspense. Its validity or invalidity is only determined by the minor adopting or not adopting it after he has attained majority, though the effect of his decision will relate back to the date of the inception of the transaction. If he decides to adopt the transaction, it becomes valid from the inception; otherwise, it will be treated as void and of no effect from the very commencement.

A sale by a Muhammadan mother of her minor son's property to find money for the expenses of the minor's sister's marriage or for the discharge of family debts or for family purposes is not for a justifying cause, according to Muhammadan Law, and is, therefore, invalid.

When the family relations of Muhammadans, such as marriage, guardianship and maintenance, come into litigation before the High Court of Bombay, the Court should be guided by the laws and usages of Muhammadans. The English law of family relations cannot be applied to such cases.

The rights of maintenance are enforceable under Anglo-Muhammadan Law and the right to enforce them under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code is unaffected by the fact that there is a concurrent permission for their enforcement in Criminal Courts under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Under Muhammadan Law, a minor son can sue his father for maintenance. This right to maintenance can be enforced against the father even when the custody of the minor is withheld from the father and the minor is in the lawful custody of his mother.

The maintenance of a minor son cannot be charged on the father's property.

When a Court draws up a charge under section 325 read with section 149, Penal Code, it clearly intimates to the accused persons that they did not cause grievous hurt to any body themselves but that they are guilty by implication of such offence, inasmuch as some body else, in prosecution of the common object of the riot in which they were engaged, did cause such grievous hurt.

When these persons are acquitted of rioting, all the offences which they are said to have committed by implication disappear, and they cannot be convicted of the substantive offence under section 325.

A plaint was verified by the first three plaintiffs, who were sui juris, for themselves, and on behalf of the mother of the other three plaintiffs, who were minors, by her son who was the first plaintiff. The first plaintiff had no authority from the mother of the infants to verify the plaint on their behalf. The first Court held that the plaint had not been properly verified, but yet proceeded to try the suit on the merits and dismissed it. That decision was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs contended in second appeal that, so far as the minor plaintiffs were concerned, the plaint ought to have been taken off the file as it was not properly verified:

Held, that the proper procedure here was not to frame any issue but to decide the preliminary question, whether the plaint was properly verified, first, for then the plaintiff would have had an opportunity of curing the defect; that, therefore, there was no substance in the plaintiffs' contention; and further, that the defect, if any, was completely cured by section 578 of the Code of 1882. M., a Pleader of 20 years' standing, received, in his private capacity, certain shares from a lady client with instructions to sell them, and realize the proceeds on her behalf.

He appropriated the proceeds, without her consent, to the payment of his fees as a Pleader. The client repeatedly insisted on the payment of the money realized as sale-proceeds; but her consent to the appropriation of the money was obtained owing to a desire on her part to avoid a quarrel with her Pleader:—

Held, (1) that in appropriating to himself the sale-proceeds of the shares, M. was guilty of wrongful conversion of his client's money, and was liable to be dealt with under section 16 of the Sind Courts Act for his misbehaviour;

(2) that M. had no right to pay himself for his fees out of the sale-proceeds of the shares, irrespective of his client's wishes;

(3) that M. had no lien or right of retainer under section 221 or 217 of the Contract Act, for that would only attach in respect of services rendered in the matter of sale;

(4) that M. could have no general lien as a factor for sale in respect of a general balance due to him as Pleader;

(5) that M. had not even a right of set off, for the shares were given to him in his private capacity;

(6) that M. stood in a fiduciary relation to his client and it was for him to show that she consented to the appropriation without undue influence on his part;

(7) that, under the circumstances, M. should be given an opportunity to atone for his misconduct by making restitution to his client.

The Police seized certain property belonging to two absconding accused under section 25 of the Police Act. seizin of the case and must continue the inquiry upto the necessary order of discharge, acquittal or conviction, as the case may be.

The Government Circular, with regard to inquiries into complaints against Police officers, does not refer to any kind of local investigation under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, and the local investigation which it mentions, is a full and complete judicial inquiry on the spot after issuing process issued, hearing witnesses on both sides, and taking the explanation of the accused person.

Then the Deputy Magistrate at the head-quarters re-called the case and passed an order under section 476, Criminal Precedure Code, directing the trial of the complainant under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code:

The first and most elementary rule of construction is that words or phrases are used in their technical meaning if they have acquired one and in their popular meaning if they have not.

The documents specified in Article 10, Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, are the documents which it was intended to exclude from the definition of a power-of-attorney in section 2 (21) of the Stamp Act.

The word "case" in the Court Fees Act must be confined to judicial cases or quasi-judicial cases as opposed to transactions.

Article 10, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act is not restricted to documents given to and presented by duly certificated Mukhtars and Pleaders under the Legal Practitioners Act.

A Mukhtar is an attorney, whether appointed specially or generally or certificated as a legal practitioner and Mukhtarnama is a document which empowers him to act for the person by or on whose behalf the document is executed and includes a power-of-attorney in favour of a person other than a certificated Mukhtar. A suit for dissolution of partnership was brought in the Court of a Munsif first class. In order to decide whether the suit was within his jurisdiction, the Munsif held an inquiry, found that the value of the suit exceeded his jurisdiction and returned the plaint for presentation in a competent Court.

The Sub-Judge, in whose Court the plaint was presented, ordered that the case should be tried de novo and refused to include in the evidence before him the evidence recorded by the Munsif:

Held, (1) that the order was correct;

Under Rule 27 of Rules of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind, no application for review of taxation of costs is allowable unless made before the decree is signed.

When a case is remanded for fresh decision and costs of appeal are directed to be costs in the cause, the lower Court when passing its decree has no power to alter the order of the Appellate Court as to costs and to allow costs not shown in the order of the Appellate Court.

The expression "successful party" in rule 23 of the rules of Court means the party who, as a result of the Court's judgment, is entitled to formulate a claim for costs against other party; it does not include a party obtaining success in proceedings before another Court.

Where the final incidence of the burden of costs is left for the decision of the lower Court, as in the case of remand, a party desiring his Pleader's fees to be included in the costs must file the usual certificate of fees in the Appellate Court before the decree of that Court is signed. The claim to co-parcenary, on which a pre-emptor's right of pre-emption is based, may arise out of the fact that the vendor and pre-emptor are jointly liable for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the property, because that joint liability arises from the fact that they own undivided interests. The law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and woman have cohabited continuously.

This presumption of law is not lightly to be repelled. It is not to be broken in or shaken by mere balance of probability. The evidence for the purpose of repelling it must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive. It can be repelled only by conclusive evidence, and cannot be displaced merely because direct evidence of the marriage which took place many years ago is not satisfactory.

The mother of the plaintiff and the father of the defendants lived as husband and wife for a long series of years. The defendants treated the plaintiff as their legitimate brother. The plaintiff's mother described herself in a document executed by her as the wife of the defendants' father who was a witness to the document:

ime the land had been enclosed and improved by the tenant to form the grounds or compound of a residential building. Expenses had been incurred by the tenant on permanent improvements to the land so as to make it fit for residential purposes. The rent during all these years remained the same, though the land had of late years increased very considerably in value. The land was transferred by sale and passed by inheritance on several occasions without any objection raised by the landlords. On the contrary, they recognised the transferees as tenants receiving rents from them, and no attempt was made to eject the tenants:

Held, that all these facts justified the conclusion that the tenancy was a permanent, transferable and heritable tenancy at a fixed rental.

The mere retention of the name of the old tenant for the purpose of identifying the holding in the Sherista of the landlord is not in itself sufficient to indicate that there was no recognition by the landlord that the tenancy was heritable and transferable. GREY v. RAM SHASHI ROY 110

A vendee, in order to resist a suit for pre-emption, must show that he has himself a right to purchase the property which is equal to, or superior than, the right of the person who claims to pre-empt it. A person, who is, by virtue of section 11 of the Act, entirely debarred from any right of pre-emption, cannot claim that under section 12 he has, as a defendant, a right of pre-emption which enables him to defeat the right of a person to whom the Act gives the right of claiming pre-emption. Therefore, a vendee, who is debarred under section 11 from claiming pre-emption as a plaintiff, is not entitled to resist a suit for pre-emption as defendant on the ground that as the next heir of the vendor he has a superior right to that of plaintiff under section 12 (a) of the Act.

Section 12 (c), thirdly, does not require that either all the owners should sue jointly, or only one of them should sue in respect of his individual and several right. Punjab Tenancy Act—concld.

In the ownership column, shamilat deh and in the cultivators' column, certain tenants on behalf of Haidar Shah co-sharer $\frac{1}{3}$ and Tola Singh $\frac{2}{3}$.

The defendants pleaded that they had paid the entire rent to Haidar Shah. Haidar Shah was then joined as defendant and he repudiated Tola Singh's claim alleging that Tola Singh was out of possession altogether and that the entry in jamabandi was wrong.

The Assistant Collector, 1st grade, applied to the Collector under section 98 of the Punjab Tenancy Act for sanction to an order directing the defendant Haidar Shah to institute a suit in a Civil Court within two months to establish the fact that the entries in the Revenue papers were wrong, and that he was entitled to the proprietary possession of the whole area in suit. The Collector replied that the onus of suing in a Civil Court should be placed upon Tola Singh, the plaintiff, and not on Haidar Shah, the defendant. The Revenue Assistant passed order accordingly and Tola Singh's appeal against the orders was rejected by the Collector. On a reference under section 84 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act by the Commissioner:

Held, that a presumption of correctness attaches to Revenue Records and the proper course would have been to postpone the case for two months to allow Haidar Shah to prove his exclusive title if so advised. The Railway Receipt for the goods was made over to A. at Ludhiana and payment for freight was also made there. The lines of various Railway Companies were used for the transit of the goods, which were conveyed to Goalundo by the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and were conveyed thence by the Indian General Navigation and Railway Company to Bhairab.

The goods were detained at Goalundo and Bhairab and plaintiff, after due notice, sued the India General Navigation and Railway Company for damages for loss in the value of goods owing to the detention. The defendant never pleaded in the first Court that it was not a Railway Company. Between the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the defendant Company there was alleged to be an agreement by which each Company was to be responsible to the other for damage to goods but not to the public:

Held, (1) that the defendant Company could not plead in appeal that it was not a Railway Company;

(2) that the defendant Company was a Railway Company and that section 80 of the Railways Act applied to the case;

(3) that as the contract was made at Ludhiana, the Ludhiana Court had jurisdiction to try the suit;

(4) that even if A. had notice of the agreement between the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the defendant Company, it would not relieve the latter of liability to A. in the suit;

Held, that the presumption in favour of the validity of registration proceedings was rebutted.

The provisions of sections 32 and 33 of the Registration Act are not open to a lax interpretation and the fact that the executant of a document was present and admitted execution when it was registered does not justify the inference that he was present at the moment when the document was actually presented for registration.

The general custom in the Punjab is that an occupancy-tenant does not lose his right by reason of the land of his holding being submerged. The Wajib-ul-arz of a village recorded an agreement that occupancy-tenants will have no right to land re-appearing after being carried away by the stream:

Held, that the entry was inoperative, because,

(1) the agreement was void for want of consideration:

A landlord is entitled to maintain a suit for rent under the Estates Land Act without tendering a patta. Even under the Rent Recovery Act. the exchange of pattas and muchilikas or the tender of a patta was not necessary to give the landlord a right to the rent, and section 7 of the Act did not lay down any rule of limitation

The effect of section 7 was to make the tender of a patta a condition precedent to entitle the landlord to institute legal proceedings to enforce the terms of a tenancy and not a condition necessary to complete his right to the rent.

The right to each instalment of rent accrues on the date fixed for the payment of the instalment according to the contract between the parties or according to usage and not when a patta is tendered. Held, (1) that the plaintiff could not rely on events prior to Original Suit No. 160 of 1907 to avoid the agreement, as he was bound to put forward in that suit all pleas which would entitle him to get the Court to hold that the agreement was not enforceable against him;

(2) that the only events subsequent to that suit alleged as entitling him to relief, viz., that the defendant made false complaints to the Police of loss of some properties included in the Will and also concealed some of them in a third person's house, disclosed no cause of action to avoid Exhibit I, and that the allegation of a mere intention on her part to defeat the bequests was not sufficient. The dismissal of a suit, under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for default, may bar a second suit of the same scope and nature, but it does not operate as res judicata. Where there is no adjudication that the rent was as alleged by the tenant or by the landlord, the determination of the question in a subsequent suit between the parties is not barred.

Where the question in controversy in a previous suit between the landlord and tenant was, not the amount of rent payable for the particular years for which rent had been claimed, but the amount of jama annually payable by the tenant to the landlord, and the Court expressly found that the plaintiff had failed to prove his allegation while the tenants (defendants) had established by affirmative evidence that the jamas were as stated by them:

Although the position of a purchaser at a patni sale may not be precisely that of a purchaser at a revenue sale (Moizuddi v. Ishan Chandra, 7 Ind.Cas. 849; 13 C. L. J. 293;15 C. W.N. 706), yet he is not privy in estate to the defaulting proprietor and does not derive his title from him, as, under section 11 of the Patni Regulation, he acquires property free of all encumbrances that might have been created upon it by the act of the defaulter, his representatives or assignees.

Therefore, a suit for rent by the purchaser cannot be barred as res judicata, because a previous suit for rent by the defaulter failed on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the then plaintiff and the defendant was not established.

If an action in ejectment is brought by the purchaser, limitation will run against him only from the date when his purchase became final.

The interest of a person in adverse possession is an incumbrance only when the adverse possession has continued for the statutory period.

Therefore, where the defaulting patnidar was not dispossessed for ten years before the patni sale, the trespasser's title by adverse possession had not been perfected, and, consequently there was no incumbrance to be annulled by the purchaser. SATISH CHANDRA SINHA v. MUNJANALI DEBI 869

The cause of action in a suit for redemption is the mortgagor's title plus a valid tender or deposit of the mortgage-debt. The mere circumstance that a Road Cess Return was successfully used in evidence by a tenant against his landlord for the purposes of another litigation, does not show that it is admissible in evidence in a subsequent rent suit on behalf of the landlord himself.

A Road Cess Return is not admissible in evidence under section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act in favour of the person by or on behalf of whom it has been filed or in favour of one who claims through him or may be deemed to be his representative-in-interest.

A Road Cess Return, filed by a ticcadar or temporary lessee of a property, is admissible in evidence in favour of the zemindar who cannot be regarded as a person by or on behalf of whom the return was filed or one who claims through the ticcadar.

The evidentiary value of a Road Cess Return, which was made by a predecessor-in-interest of the tenant defendant, is very considerable in favour of the plaintiff landlord and against the defendant tenant.

The provisions of section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act are not exhaustive. They merely limit the application of section 21 of the Evidence Act, and exclude Road Cess Returns when they are sought to be admitted in favour of the person by or on behalf of whom they have been filed. A mortgagee obtained a decree for sale upon a mortgage executed by a Muhammadan. The decree was under execution when the wife of the mortgagor brought a suit in forma pauperis against her husband and the mortgagee, claiming from her husband a lakh of rupees on account of her dower and alleging that that sum was charged on the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgage. The suit was decreed against her husband, but dismissed against the mortgagee, and it was ordered that the amount of Court-fees, which would have been paid by the plaintiff, should be the first charge on the amount decreed and also should be recoverable from the husband.

The Collector then obtained execution of the decree as to the Court-fee against the mortgaged property which was sold and the defendant in the present suit became the purchaser. Subsequently in execution of his mortgage-decree, the mortgagee purchased the property and brought this suit for possession against the first purchaser:

Held, that the decree in the suit for dower did not create any charge on the mortgaged property in favour of the Government, and, therefore, the Government had no right to sell the mortgaged property to realise the amount of the Court-fee and the purchaser had got no title by his purchase.

In a redemption suit, the mortgagor obtained a decree and in accordance with the decree deposited the mortgage amount of Rs. 10,000 in Court. An appeal was filed by the mortgagee and execution was ordered only on the mortgagor furnishing security for Rs. 3,000 for any mesne profits that might be payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee in case the decree of the lower Court was reversed on appeal. The mortgagor wanted the Court to accept as security the sum of Rs. 10,000 which he had deposited in Court:

Held, per Abdur Rahim, J., confirming the order of the lower Court, that the mortgagor was entitled to give it as security. The decree directed that the money should be deposited in Court; it did not say to the credit of the defendant. The money remained to the credit of the suit and there was no reason why it could not be given as security.

Per Sundara Aiyar, J. contra—The sum of Rs. 10,000 was no longer the money of the mortgagor and he had no disposing power over it. Only some property over which one has a present disposing power could be given as security. So, no charge could be created over the mortgagee's liability for Rs. 10,000 which would come into existence in case the decree for redemption was reversed. Small Cause Court—Record of evidence—Judgment—Procedure.

The reason why the Judge of a Small Cause Court is not required to record more than a brief memorandum of the substance of the evidence given before him, or to give any reasons for his judgment on that evidence, is that the law pre-supposes a prompt and continuous trial, usually finished in one hearing, followed by an immediate decision while the evidence of both sides, most of it unrecorded, is still fresh in all its details in the mind of the Judge. This is of the very essence of the Small Cause Court procedure.

Solicitor—Professional misconduct—Two remedies open—Recourse to both—Contempt of Court—Irregularity—Forgery—Intention to defraud—Substituting name of another witness in subpœna—Striking name off the Roll—Charges upon which Solicitor was not heard.

If a Solicitor on behalf of his client has recourse to another tribunal and a different process, in order to get what one Court had decided he was not entitled to have, the Solicitor does not commit any contempt of the first Court.

Therefore, where a plaintiff who had been refused a warrant for the detention of the defendant by a Civil Court straightway started a criminal process on the same subject-matter, and, by means of allegations to which the Civil Court attached no credit, obtained his warrant from a different Court, almost as a matter of course, his conduct does not necessarily involve any punishable contempt of the Civil Court, because he is not restricted by law to a single form of remedy and may pursue all the legal remedies appropriate to his grievance.

The appellant, a Solicitor, was desirous of securing the attendance of two witnesses on behalf of his client, sub pœnas were issued upon them and duly served. It turned out that the witnesses said they knew nothing about the case, so the appellant asked them to return the sub pœnas to him, which they did. He then struck out their names and substituted for them the names of two other witnesses:

Held, that the appellant was not guilty of forgery, as there was no intent to defraud on the part of the appellant, and that at the most he committed an irregularity for which some pecuniary penalty on his part was an adequate punishment.

The appellant's name was struck off the Roll of Barristers and Solicitors of the Supreme Court on charges of contempt and forgery and for his conduct in other professional matters upon which he was not heard. Section 42 of the Sepecific Relief Act does not sanction every form of declaration; but only a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property.

An injunction is a consequential relief.

In a suit, the plaintiff sought for the following reliefs:—(1) that it may be declared that a certain mortgage-deed executed by one of the defendants in favour of another, is collusive and without consideration; that the decree passed on the basis thereof has been fraudulently obtained and it is ineffectual, and that for the satisfaction of that decree the mortgaged property mentioned in the decree cannot be sold; (2) that if the Court finds any obstacle in granting the above relief, then it may be declared that without the deduction of the fair value of 3-annas share of each of certain mouzas named and excluding the same, the defendant has no right to lay the whole charge on the remaining property in claim and to bring about the sale of the said property; and (3) that any other relief which the Court may find the plaintiff entitled to, be granted to her:

Held, that the suit is not such as is contemplated by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and, therefore, not "a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed" within the meaning of clause (iii) of Article 17 of Scdedule II of the Court Fees Act.

The history of decrees merely declaratory traced.

The device to attempt an evasion of Court-fees by casting the prayers of the plaint into a declaratory shape, does not merit encouragement or favour.

Subrogation—English and Indian Law—Reversioner—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58, 91—Person interested in the property—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Charge under a mortgage executed by daughters during the life-times of widows—Registration—Lien.

A person, who pays off a mortgage-debt on the properties of a deceased male owner, cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights either of the daughters or of the original mortgagee whose debt he discharges. The scope of the rule of subrogation in India is much narrower than in England or America.

Mere payment of a mortgage-debt by a stranger would not entitle him to the mortgagee's rights by subrogation.

A reversioner cannot voluntarily claim to redeem a mortgage made by the last male holder or institute a suit for that purpose. But when a suit is instituted by the mortgagee for sale, a reversioner has sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to discharge the mortgage to prevent the loss of the property to which he would be entitled to succeed on the death of the widow. In the latter case, the reversioner is entitled under section 69 of the Contract Act to be reimbursed by the widow in respect of the money which the latter was bound by law to pay. The scope of section 69 of the Contract Act and of sections 85 and 91 of the Transfer of Property Act is not co-extensive. The daughters of a deceased mortgagor, therefore, have sufficient interest in the land to entitle them to discharge the mortgage-debt when the property is brought to sale in execution of the mortegage-decree against the mortgagor's widow. By so discharging, they obtain a charge over the land which they are entitled to assign or charge in favour of a third person who has enabled them to discharge the motgage-debt.

Subrogation will arise only in those cases where the party claiming it advanced the money to pay a debt which, in the event of default by the debtor, he would be bound to pay or where he had some interest to protect, or where he advanced the money under an agreement, express or implied, made either with the debtor or creditor, that he would be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor. In India, the scope of the rule is narrower still. A mere agreement, either with the creditor holding a mortgage or with the debtor owing it, cannot give a person, lending money to discharge the mortgage, a lien over the property. An agreement with the creditor or the debtor may entitle him to sue him for the exection of a mortgage-deed, or a deed of assignment of the mortgage as the case may be: but mortgages for a sum of Rs. 100 and upwards can be created only by registered instruments and a mere agreement to mortgage is insufficient to create a lien. The accused was convicted for being in possession of a certain quantity of cement; and because there was a heap of cement lying on the premises of the East Indian Railway Company at L. and because the accused was a mistry in the employ of the Company at L., it was assumed that this cement was stolen from the Company:

Held, that, in the absence of any evidence that shortly or immediately previous to the finding of the cement in the possession of the accused, a quantity of cement belonging to the Company had been missing, there could not be any reasonable suspicion which would bring the case within section 2 of Act XXI of 1857.

The only difference which section 2 of this Act makes between an offence under this Act and one under section 411, Indian Penal Code, is that it is not necessary under this Act to offer proof that the stolen property has been in the hands of a third person who actually stole it, as is the case under section 411. The respondents applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of a deceased person claiming to administer the estate as his daughters. The appellants denied the legitimacy of the respondents and claimed to be in possession for 30 years as the deceased's nieces. The property was alleged to be under a mortgage to another person:

Held, (1) that the equity of redemption was not a security or debt within the meaning of section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act and the respondents could file a suit for redemption without such a certificate or Letters of Administration;

(2) that the application for Letters of Administration was an attempt to obtain adjudication as to the status of the respondents and to obtain possession without filing a regular suit and should be rejected;

Suit—concld.

It cannot be laid down as an inflexible proposition of law that failure to strictly carry out statutory directions or judicial orders does always make it obligatory upon a Court of Justice to dismiss the suit as improperly instituted.

A suit was allowed to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action, but the payment of the defendant's costs was made a condition precedent to the institution of the fresh suit. The plaintiff brought a fresh suit without paying the costs of the defendant. The Court, upon an objection taken on behalf of the defendant, directed that those costs must be paid within a day, and they were duly deposited:

The defendant granted a patta of coal lands to A., against whom he obtained a decree in the Sub-Judge's Court at Burdwan, for rent, in execution of which he attached the lease-hold interest of A. The sale of the property was fixed on September 10th, 1904, and on September 8, A. filed his petition of insolvency in the High Court and the vesting order was made on the same day. The defendant then applied to the Sub-Judge of Burdwan to substitute the Official Assignee in the place of the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings, which was done and the sale was held on March 6, 1905, and the defendant became the purchaser and took possession on June 14, 1905. In the meanwhile on May 23, 1905, the Official Assignee sold the property with the permission of the High Court to one B. from whom the plaintiff purchased and sued for recovery of possession :

Title—contd.

Held, that, although the order for substituting the Official Assignee in place of the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings, was incorrect,—A. B. Miller v. Budh Singh Dudhuria, 18 C. 43—yet he having been added and having taken no exception to the procedure, the sale must be regarded as having taken place in his presence; and he having taken no steps to have that sale set aside in the manner provided by law, the sale must be held to be good and effective as against him and also against the plaintiff who claims through him.

C.) of 1879.

The defence was that the jagir was not one for life for maintenance of the ladies, but an absolute jagir granted to the ancestors of their husbands, which the ladies had been holding under the ordinary Hindu Law.

Owing to lapse of time, the plaintiff's evidence as to the grant to the ladies was not very strong, but, such as it was, it was strongly corroborated by the conduct of the ladies themselves and by the admissions of defendant No. 1:

Held, that the question of title need not be positively proved by the plaintiff, but that he could avail himself of the defendant's admissions.

Mulki papers filed by the elakadars under Regulation VIII of 1800, para. III, containing statements made by the plaintiff's predecessor at a time when there was no dispute against his own interest, are admissible in evidence.

The plaintiffs purchased a holding in execution of a decree on a mortgage held by them against the admitted tenant. The defendants subsequently purchased the same holding in execution of a decree for rent held by a co-sharer landlord:

Title—concld.

Held, (1) that the title of the plaintiffs was superior to that of the defendants who, as purchasers at a sale in execution of a decree for rent by a co-sharer landlord, were in the same position as a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for money;

(2) that the question of transferability of the holding could not be raised at the instance of the defendants who were the representatives-in-interest of the tenant and were bound by the same estoppel as the judgment-debtor whose right, title and interest had been purchased by them. Trade-mark—Infringement — Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23—Continuing wrong—Registration of mark—Right to sue—Cause of action—Actual deception not necessary—Imitation of mark when an infringement of trade-mark—Third person allowed to use a similar mark—Damages—Actual damage not necessary to be proved.

The infringement of a trade-mark is a continuing wrong and so long as the infringement continues, a fresh cause of action arises de die in diem.

In India, a plaintiff can maintain a suit for infringement of trade-mark even if he has not proved registration of his trade-mark.

In a suit for infringement of trade-mark, it is not necessary to prove that any one has been actually deceived.

It is sufficient if it is proved that the defendant contemplates committing or has threatened to commit an infringement.

The question is not whether a purchaser has been deceived but whether he is likely to be deceived.

In deciding whether there has been an infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark, the Court has to see whether the device used by the defendant is such a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' mark as would be calculated to deceive the ultimate purchaser. The question is not what would be the effect on brokers or large dealers but whether the mark is calculated to deceive incautious, ignorant or unwary purchasers.

If as the result of an arbitration, another trader has been allowed to use a trade-mark more closely resembling plaintiff's mark than that of defendant, that is no reason why the defendant should not be restrained from using other marks calculated to deceive the public.

For damages to be recovered for infringement of trade-mark, it is not necessary that special damage should be proved.

It is sufficient to show that plaintiff's right has been invaded, in which case, some damages, even if only nominal, will be given. ABDUL SALAM v. HAMID ULLAH, 166 P. W. R. 1912 116

The mere fact that a transfer was made to defeat an anticipated attachment does not evidence an intent to defeat or delay creditors of the vendor.

In a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession:

Held, that, under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the delivery of possession was an alternative to the execution and registration of a document which was an act formal in a high degree, that the document did not amount to a delivery of possession by the defendant to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff did not acquire any title by means of the document. If two persons mutually exchange two things and mutually fix the values of the exchanged things in current coin and exchange them as of equal value, they must be held to have effected sales and paid prices and not merely to have effected an exchange or barter.

A conveyance of land in consideration of moneys already due to the vendee by the vendor is either a "sale" under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act or an "exchange" under section 118 of the said Act.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee gave up his right to possession in part of the land mortgaged and the mortgage-money due to him, and in consideration therefor, purchased orally the equity of redemption in another part of the land from the mortgagor:

Held, (1) that the transaction amounted to a 'sale' under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and was invalid for want of registration;

(2) that the mortgagee continued to remain in possession only as mortgagee after the said oral sale, and that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the property within the statutory period;

(3) that the mortgagee could not assert a title by adverse possession as from the date of the oral sale;

(4) that Article 144 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act could not be invoked by the mortgagee if the mortgagor was not barred by Article 148 from redeeming and recovering possession of the mortgaged property;

Held, (1) that A. could not be allowed to rely on the lease set up by her, as it was unregistered; nor could she be allowed to give oral evidence of that lease;

(2) that as B. admitted A.'s ownership and that he was her tenant, proof of the relation of landlord and tenant became unnecessary, the admission of B. acting as an estoppel to the production of any evidence contradicting the admission;

(3) that A. could only recover the money as for use and occupation for the two years of the tenancy and as the amount claimed by her was not shown to be excessive, she was entitled to it.

The lease of a salt-pan is not illegal merely because the sanction of the Collector of Salt Revenue has not been obtained thereto.

Per Batchelor, J.—Receipts for rent granted by a landlord are admissible in evidence, not as proving the terms of the contract of letting, but as proving from the conduct of the parties what would be a fair rent for the admitted tenancy. Where, under the terms of a lease, a right of forfeiture accrues to the lessor, he is put to his election, and, if he manifests and communicates to the lessee his intention to enforce the forfeiture, that is an election to determine the tenancy, the election is irrevocable and the parties cannot, by a subsequent agreement, revive the old tenancy.

Similarly, if he elects not to enforce the forfeiture and manifests and communicates to the lessee his intention accordingly, that is, elects to waive the forfeiture, his election is irrevocable.

If lessees are re-admitted, after the determination of tenancy by exercise of the right of forfeiture, the old tenancy is not revived and the lessees are liable to pay compensation for use and occupation. CHENGIAH v. DAMARA KUMARA THIMMA 445

Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 63 Following trust property—Liability of third person.

Trust property may be followed into the hands of any one in whose hands it can be identified. The only person, who can escape liability for trust property in his possession, is a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the trust, or a transferee from him.

By two deeds, one L. vested his property in trust in order that his debts might be liquidated and appointed P. and H. as trustees. One of the two deeds was attested by S. the son of L. P. and H., as trustees, executed certain promissory-notes in favour of certain creditors of L. After L.'s death, his son S. repudiated the trust. Soon after, the District Judge released the original trustees, P. and H., and appointed in their place G. and R. as trustees. Thereafter, S. sued G. and R. for possession of the trust property but this suit was dismissed on compromise on the understanding that all the property had been restored to the plaintiff S. As a matter of fact, however, some property remained with the trustees G. and R., while some was restored to S. The creditors sued S, G. and R. on the footing of pro-notes which had been executed by P. and H., the original trustees The first Court dismissed the suits as against S. on the ground that he was no party to the pro-notes:

In a suit in a Sub-Judge's Court, the plaintiff prayed that his mourasi mokarari right in certain lands be declared and a decree passed against the defendants for directing them to grant him a lease, the yearly rent payable on which was Rs. 71. The plaintiff valued the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 1,100 but gave no materials or data to support the valuation:

Held, that, under the provisions of section 7, clause (x), sub-cl. (c), of the Court Fees Act and section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the suit should have been valued at Rs. 71 for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction, and it ought to be filed in the Munsif's Court.

Where the decision of a Subordinate Court is arrived at, though wrongly, either on the facts or on a proper judicial consideration of the matters placed before it, the High Court will not interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

But where the Court below failed to grasp the point which really had to be determined, namely, whether, under the provisions of the Court Fees Act and the Suits Valuation Act, the valuation of the suit given by the plaintiff was correct or not, and the Court simply accepted the valuation given by the plaintiff without attempting to ascertain the materials on which the valuation was based, in fact without arriving at a judicial decision at all:

Held, that the High Court should interfere, if satisfied that the decision of the Court below was wrong.

In such a case, the High Court will interfere even if neither party is prejudiced, because the law requires that suits of certain values should be tried in certain Courts and the question of prejudice does not arise. PORT CANNING AND LAND IMPROVEMENT CO., LD. v. ROSON ALI 46

Where an owner of land, without wilfulness or negligence, uses his land in the ordinary manner, though mischief thereby accrues to his neighbour, he is not liable for damages; but if, with a view to use the land in an unusual manner, he brings upon his land water which would not naturally have come upon it, he will be liable for damages for the escape of the water into the land of his neighbour.

The defendants lowered the level of their land so as to render it culturable, with the result that the water from an adjoining tank passed to the land of the defendants and subsequently overflowed into the lands of the plaintiffs:

Held, (1) that as the defendants had not used their land in any artificial or unusual manner, they were amply within their rights in what they did;

(2) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction as against the defendants, to compel the latter to raise a barrier for their protection. KENARAM AKHULI v. SRISTIDHAR CHATTERJEE, 16 C. W. N. 875 543

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859)—Jurisdiction after the expiration of term of contract or completion of work—Preamble—Object of the Act to punish workmen who receive advances and then break their contracts to work.

In a case under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, where either the work has been completed or the term of the contract has expired, a Magistrate has jurisdiction to entertain a complaint under section 1 and to order re-payment of the advance under section 2 of that Act.

One object of the Act may have been to provide against workmen a speedy remedy for employers who have made advances on account of work; but the main object was, as the preamble shows, to provide for the punishment of workmen who have taken advances and have fraudulently broken their contracts to work.

The impossibility of a master being able to exercise the option of demanding an order from a Magistrate ordering a workman to perform the work, does not affect his right to ask for an order for the re-payment of the advance and subsequently for an order for the workman's punishment by imprisonment if he fails to comply with the order.
